Poetry.

At the Door of the Year.

The corridors of Time
Are full of doors—the portals of closed years;
We enter them no more, though bitter tears
Beat hard against them, and we hear the chimes
Of lost dreams, dirge-like, in behind them ring,
At memory's opening.

But one door stands ajar—
The New Year's; while a golden chain of days
Holds it half shut. The eager foot delays,
That presses to its threshold's mighty bar;
And fears that shrink, and hopes that shout aloud,
Around it wait and crowd.

It shuts back the unknown,
And dare we truly welcome one more year,
Who down the past a mocking laughter hear,
From idle aims like wandering breezes blown,
We whose large aspirations dimmed and shrank
Till the year's scroll was blank?

We pause beside the door;
Thy year, O God, how shall we enter in?
How shall we thence Thy hidden treasure win?
Shall we return in beggary as before,
When Thou art near at hand, with infinite wealth,
Wisdom and heavenly health.

The footsteps of a Child
Sound close beside us! Listen! He will speak.
His birthday bells have hardly rung a week,
Yet has He trod the world's press undefiled.
"Come with Me!" hear Him through his smiling say.
"Behold I am the Way."

Against the door his face
Shines as the sun. His touch is a command;
The years unfold before His baby hand!
The beauty of His presence fills all space.
"Enter through Me," he saith, "nor wander more.
For lo! I am the Door."

And all doors openeth He.
The new-born Christ, the Lord of the New Year,
The threshold of our locked hearts standeth near;
And while He gives us back love's rusted key,
Our future on us with his eyes has smiled,
Even as a little child.

Miscellany.

HULDAH'S SUCCESS.

She stood before the dish-pan with a questioning and perplexed expression on her sweet young face. It was August, and she had washed the dishes ever since the first of June. These particular dishes were especially exasperating. As Huldah said to herself—she was never known to utter a fault-finding word in any other hearing—they were "all stuck up." How tired she was of scraping and scrubbing, and washing and rinsing and polishing, none but her weary little self ever thought. The teaspoons were stained with eggs, and sauce-plates were rough with sugar and berry juice. Then there were oat-meal pans, pots and kettles without number. The great rambling farm-house was full of summer boarders, and Huldah surveyed the pan full and the table full of dishes, piled up as high as they could be without danger of a tumble, and wondered how she could ever go on washing the sticky things for the next two months; for these boarders always remained in the country through September. After they went away Huldah could go to school, and—better than all—there would be a little time for piano practice, which was more to this little girl than everything else in the world. The proprietor of this house and farm was not Huldah's own father. Her step-father, John Blaisdell, was called by his Long Island neighbors an unusually "fore-handed man." Fore-handed in this connection meant "close-fisted," for this farmer worked like a slave to make money, and racked his brains day and night to devise means for saving it. In order to make this house popular for summer boarders, there must be a piano in the parlor, comfortable, cosy furniture, and a luxurious table. The piano came hard, but it was a good one, and little Huldah was provided with a teacher for the fall and winter months, who agreed to furnish the necessary instructions for twenty-five cents a lesson. There was one lesson a week, and this was paid for on the spot by Mrs. Blaisdell, who, to use her own phraseology, "skinched it out of the butter money." Mr. Blaisdell said that "of all the hifalution notions, this was the hifalutinest." As he was never near enough the parlor to be bothered with the "strumming," as he called it, he soon forgot all about the matter.

"I wonder how girls feel that never have to wash dishes?" Huldah asked, as she commenced her scraping. "I wonder if it is wicked to feel like breaking things? I always feel like breaking dishes. Perhaps I shall throw them all out of the window some day," and the little girl laughed in her imagina- [illegible] and oatmeal pots,—flying one after another into the yard. Then she pinned up her sleeves, tied her bib apron a little more securely, and went briskly at the obnoxious work. It was hard work, but she did not stop for a long time. Then a certain happy thought seemed to strike her, for her face looked very bright as she washed and dried her little red hands and stole softly into the dining-room. There was no one to see her as she opened a drawer of the great old-fashioned secretary and took out a piece of music and hurried back to the kitchen. There was a strange and weird light in the child's brown eyes, as she carefully parted the sheets and placed them in a rack above the sink. The music was an arrangement of Beethoven's symphony in A major. It had been loaned her by a lady boarder, who wondered what this little dish-washing country girl could possibly want of Beethoven. If she could have seen the child's rapt look as she stood on her wooden stool before the sink, humming the wonderful strains, and keeping time with the glasses she was polishing, she would have had some faint realization, at least, of what it meant. Sometimes Huldah got too near the end of the stool and lost her equilibrium, and sometimes she forgot and polished the same piece two or three times over, but she never stopped work, and, indeed, made considerable progress. In the midst of Huldah's greatest enthusiasm her mother entered upon the scene, and immediately took in the situation. "Huldah Calhoun," she exclaimed, "those dishes ought all to have been washed and put away. What are you doing with that piece of music?"

"Just seeing how it goes; that's all," said the child, with a sigh.

"Go put it where you got it from this minute," the lady continued sternly. "Your father has just sent up word that he can't spare anybody to pick the beans for dinner. You'll have to do it, and iron the napkins besides. Dear me, Huldah! If you knew how you kept things behindhand with your capers, you would be more careful."

Huldah took the music back to the secretary drawer; then, without a word, wiped the rest of the dishes and hurried out among the bean vines. Huldah liked to pick beans. Anything that took her out of doors was a relief and a diversion, and now the full green pods came off the curling vines and dropped into the pan to the time of the Seventh symphony. Huldah had thought very much about the composer of this wonderful music. Some one had told her that this symphony was written when the great master was too deaf to hear a note of it. This seemed very sad to the sensitive child, and now the beans dropped more slowly, and Huldah had to leave off picking and wipe her eyes. Then the sad face brightened, as she thought of something else she had been told. Beethoven played so well on the violin when he was only eleven years old that he made many of those who heard him weep, and everybody came away from the performance wondering and astonished at the little boy's genius. It was a piece of Bach's that he played when folks cried so hard. She loved Bach's music, too. She recalled a sparkling fantasia and fugue she had once heard when a neighbor took her to the city to hear a great concert, and her eyes shone with a new light; but they soon grew sad again. Her friend had told her that Bach studied so hard that he became totally blind, and died dissatisfied with the beautiful things he had written, because he could not compose any more. Bach played the organ well when he was only eight years old. She wondered if Beethoven and Bach had been obliged to wash dishes if they would have accomplished such wonderful things. She was twelve, and what had she done! It was all on account of having so much housework to do that she could not play just as well on the piano. Huldah had the ambition and self-confidence which are the fortunate and natural accompaniments of true genius. Slowly, very slowly, the beans found their way to the pan now, for Huldah had left Bach and Beethoven, to do a sum in mental arithmetic. If she could practice a half-hour each day, how many full hours would that make in the year? It wasn't hard to reckon, and she had just found the answer when her mother's voice recalled her to her work. Huldah stopped short, and looked into the pan.

"Enough for a mess," she said, and hurried into the house.

"What in the world has kept you so long?" the busy, bustling woman inquired, snatching the beans from her daughter's hands. "Get to shelling as fast as you can!" she continued. "There is somebody extra for dinner; some hifalutin musician from the city. He's very particular about what he eats, I suppose; such people generally are: and those beans ought to be cooking this very minute. They'll be as tough as David's armor, I've no doubt. Huldah Calhoun, couldn't you have been a little swifter?"

The child said no word of Beethoven or Bach. She never spoke of her dreams, and rarely of her wishes, to her mother. She knew intuitively that she would not have understood her. But Huldah had sensed very little of what had been said after the magic word, "musician." She had drawn a chair to her might and turning things over in her mind with equal celerity. She did not ask any questions. That was not her way; and she wondered where the musician would sit at the table, and if he would play on the piano, and if he did play should she hear him, or be in the kitchen washing dishes.

"Mary Rich was in a minute ago," her mother began again, "and she said you would be dreadful pleased to hear the musiker again. I s'pose that's the [illegible] musician. I wonder Mary don't speak English better, after living in this country so long."

"Why should I be glad? Did Mary say?" Huldah had asked a question at last. One long yellow pod was open in her fingers, and the fingers trembled so that Mrs. Blaisdell looked from them to the pale face of her daughter in unfeigned astonishment.

"Well, I should like to know!" she exclaimed, and from the expression of her face it was plain she spoke the truth. Huldah emptied the pod and repeated the question.

"She said he was the leader, or whatever you call it, of that concert she took you to hear, and that you were quite carried away by his music."

"You can leave now, Huldah, and tidy up a bit," the lady went on in a tone of unusual tenderness. The beans were not all shelled, but Huldah needed no second bidding. She ran like a deer up the long flights of back stairs to her little room in the attic, and once there, locked her door—for what reason she could never have told—and sat down by the window to think it all over.

"Mr. Blaisdell may storm if he's a mind to," said Huldah's mother, as her daughter left her, "but I shall send over for Sophrony West, and give Huldah a breathing spell. Good gracious! how her little hands trembled at the thought of the music. She is just like her father. If he'd a-lived, nobody would have beat him with the fiddle. I wish I'd thought a little more of Carl's playing at the time. I wish to goodness I had. I've told him many a time that I'd enough sight rather hear a cat squeak than that violin of his a-wailing and lamenting. It did use to make my hair stand on end sometimes, and yet Carl was a good player. I must try to make it up to Huldah in some way."

The little girl was too restless and excited to stay long in the attic. She came down looking very sweet and lovely, in a light print dress, with pretty lace in the neck and sleeves. She would iron the napkins for dinner, and the one that was to be beside his plate, should be just the least bit nicer than anybody's else. She would put some of the late Jacqueminot roses in it,—the great, red-hearted, velvet-leaved roses, which were her special favorites. He wouldn't think it strange. Roses would make a musician happy, she was quite sure.

"Did the music man play so very extra nice?" Mrs. Blaisdell enquired. Huldah could not quite understand this new interest of her mother's, and the lady would have been puzzled to explain herself.

"He did not play at all, mamma," the child replied with a merry laugh; "at least he had nothing but a white stick in his hand. It seemed to me, though, he made all the music. Mary says the stick is called a baton—marks the time this way, and they follow him; but I told Mary he did a good deal more than mark the time, and Mary laughed and said yes, and the right kind of a conductor always inspired his orchestra."

"Well, you and Mary do beat all!" Mrs. Blaisdell replied; and if your father was alive, he'd match the pair of you."

Huldah had been told that she took after her father in her odd notions, but this was the first time that the tone of the communication seemed to have either respect or interest in it. When found she "made a note on't," as Capt. Cuttle would have suggested. But it was indistinctively though with some curiosity. After the table was set and the musiker's place made as bright as possible, Huldah went into the garden and picked three of the fairest roses she could find. The stems she tucked into the folds of her visitor's napkin, leaving the wonderful blossoms exposed to view. She did not put them in a vase, because she feared he would not know they were intended for him, and he might not feel at liberty to take them away with him. Huldah did not eat at the first table, so she could not see how the master received her tribute; but that was of small account. It was quite enough that he should be pleased with her Jacqueminots. The little girl was in the orchard when the great family of boarders poured into the dining-room. At this time she usually washed the pots and pans and skimmers and cullenders and pudding bags—housekeepers only can tell what did not fall to her lot on these occasions—but Sophrony had arrived, and Huldah was at liberty to enjoy herself as she pleased. She had taken the symphony out with her, and when the object of her enthusiasm took up her roses, she was beating time with a branch of asparagus, her symphony arranged on a low apple bough, with a fantastic backing of twigs and green leaves.

"Are these roses intended for me?" the master inquired, as he picked up the flowers.

The lady at the right laughed lightly as she said:

"That must be Huldah's work."

"Who is Huldah?" the gentleman asked.

"The daughter of our hostess," his companion replied. "She went to one of your concerts not long ago, and has not been able to talk of anything else since, I am told."

The musician caressed the roses for a moment, then put them in his glass, and asked for some water.

"I must see Huldah," he said, thoughtfully.

The asparagus branch broke, and Huldah was struck with a new idea. She would go into the house and see if she could pick out the notes on the piano. The boarders were all at dinner, and nobody need know anything about it. The coast was clear, as she supposed, and Huldah sat down to the instrument and arranged her music. The symphony went hard, as might have been expected, and after a trial of some of the simplest passages she struck into the fugue of Bach's of which composition she had never a note, and only having heard it on that one long-to-be-remembered occasion. Her memory was perfect and her ear wonderfully correct. Her manner of rendering some of the passages that had most pleased her was marvelous in the extreme. Her hands were too inexperienced and too stiff with hard work for brilliant execution; but there was a soul in every note she struck which told a plain story of the genius that dominated her life.

"This is Huldah," said a lady's voice, as the amateur musician took her hands dreamily from the piano; and Huldah turned in consternation to meet the kind eyes of the master. Her roses had been transferred to a vase, and this he held in his hand.

"It was very kind in you, Huldah, to give me those beautiful roses," he said, simply.

"I knew you would like roses," she replied, with enthusiasm.

"Tell me, dear," the gentleman went on, as he drew the child to his side, and imprisoned one of her little warm hands, "how many times have you heard the music which you have just played?" "Just once; only once," was the childish response, and then it seemed to me it all came out of your stick."

There was a general laugh at this, but the musician, who loved art for art's sake, and revered genius as a divine gift, only smiled, and held the trembling hands a trifle closer, and looked more searchingly into the tender upturned eyes.

Then the master and the little country girl walked out in the August sunshine. He told of the sacrifices and the drudgery which a cultivated talent must always entail, but she smiled and thought of the dishes she had hated, but faithfully washed, and did not feel afraid.

"It will be easy, because I love it," she said, simply.

"Huldah Calhoun, you haven't eaten a mouthful of dinner," Mrs. Blaisdell exclaimed as the little girl entered the kitchen at last.

"Oh, mamma!" said Huldah, with a radiant look, which reminded her mother more than ever of Carl's face when he played the fiddle; "If you are willing, I can learn music. The gentleman says so. He wants to see you right away. Oh, mamma! mamma! what do people do when they are too happy?" The beautiful dream was all realized.

This summer symphony was played four years ago, and now Huldah is in Berlin with her dear Mary Rich, the lady who took her to hear her first concert.

"Huldah plays and sings like a seraph," Mary once wrote to the musiker, and the musiker replied, "I do not think your enthusiasm is exaggerated; Huldah is art's own child."

An Aged Cigarette Smoker.

The old chapel is still standing in a fair state of preservation, used for the daily service of the San Gabriel parish; and there are in its near neighborhood a few crumbling abode hovels left, the only remains of the once splendid and opulent mission. In one of these lives a Mexican woman, eighty-two years old, who for more than half a century has washed and mended the priests' laces, repaired the robes, and remodelled the vestments of San Gabriel. She is worth crossing the continent to see—all white from head to foot, as if bleached by some strange gramarye; white hair, white skin, blue eyes faded nearly to white; white cotton clothes, ragged and not over clean, yet not a trace of color in them; a white linen handkerchief, delicately embroidered by herself, always tied loosely around her throat. She sits on a low box, leaning against the wall, with three white pillows at her back, her feet on a cushion on the ground; in front of her, another low box, on this a lace-maker's pillow, with knotted fringe stretched on it; at her left hand a battered copper caldron holding hot coals to warm her fingers and to light her cigarettes. A match she will never use; and she has seldom been without a cigarette in her mouth since she was six years old.—"H. H.," in the December Century.

Salt with Nuts.

One time, while enjoying a visit from an Englishman, Hickory nuts were served in the evening when my English friend called for salt, stating that he knew a case of a woman who was taken violently ill by eating heartily of nuts in the evening. The celebrated Dr. Abernethy was sent for, but it was after he had become too fond of his cups, and he was not in a condition to go. He muttered "Salt! salt!" of which no notice was taken. Next morning he went to the place, and she was a corpse. He said that had they given her salt it would have relieved her, and if they would allow him to make an examination he would convince them. On opening the stomach, the nuts were found in a mass. He sprinkled salt on this, and it immediately dissolved. I have known of a sudden death myself which appears to have been the effect of the same cause. I generally eat salt with nuts, and consider it improves them.—Boston Budget.

Curing a Bad Memory.

Your memory is bad, perhaps, but I can tell you two secrets that will cure the worst memory. One is to read a subject when you are strongly interested. The other is not only to read, but think. When you have read a paragraph or a page, stop, close the book, and try to remember the ideas on that page, and not only recall them vaguely to your mind, but put them into words and speak them out. Faithfully follow these two rules, and you will have the golden keys of knowledge. Besides inattentive reading, there are other things injurious to memory. One is the habit of skimming over newspapers, all in a confused jumble, never to be thought of again, thus cultivating a habit of careless reading hard to break. Another is the reading of trashy novels. Nothing is so fatal to reading with profit as the habit of running through story after story, and forgetting them as soon as read. I know a gray-haired woman, a life-long lover of books, who sadly declared that her mind had been ruined by such reading.

SQUARING UP ACCOUNTS. A baker in St. John, N. B., was electrified the other day when a woman entered his shop and paid a balance of $1.69 and interest on a wedding-cake which she obtained from him eight years before. "I have been to the mission meetings in the cathedrel," she explained, "and the fathers advised us to square off accounts on earth before we laid up treasures in heaven."

A hot flatiron is used to scoop out the hole in the block of ice in which raw oysters are served at some of the Murray Hill dinner parties. Now that the secret is out, anybody can do it.—N. Y. Mail.

Old Folks Concert.

The old folks' concert at the vestry of the Universalist Church, on New Year's evening, was excellent, and called out a large audience. A few minutes after 8 o'clock those who took part marched into the vestry from the ladies' parlor, dressed in olden time costume, with powdered hair, etc., preceded by their chorister, Mr. Philip Carver. After passing around they took their places upon the platform, and then the audience was entertained with choruses, quartettes, duetts, etc., accompanied on the piano by R. T. Sawyer, and on the base-viol, (which used to do good service in the Universalist Church forty years ago,) by Nathaniel Nightingale. There was also some very fine solo singing by Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer. The "corn supper" was unusually good, and over a hundred enjoyed the same.

The following are the names of those who took part in the concert:—

Miss Annie Bumpus, Mrs. J. H. Sweetser, Miss C. S. Hubbard, Mrs. Philip Carver, Mrs. Ellen M. Miller, Mrs. William Parker, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Quincy Tirrell, Mrs. G. H. Field, Miss Carrie Spear, Messrs. Philip Carver, Benjamin Curtis, Geo. H. Field, Charles M. Winneberger, Richard G. Elliott, John H. Sweetser, George W. Kenison, Joseph W. Lombard, William Parker.

Odd Fellowship.

We learn that a movement is being made to establish a lodge of Odd Fellows in Quincy, and that it is to be a success. The hall in Wilson's new block is talked of as the location, and is a very desirable place. It has been a wonderment to many for some time that there has not been a lodge of this order in town. It is true there was a lodge once, but it was too long ago to be remembered by many who are now qualified for the degrees. Most of the other leading orders are represented in Quincy, and Odd Fellowship will doubtless find its proper place.

Like Masonry, it is an ancient institution, and estimates its membership in the United States at 520,000. Odd Fellowship places that noble sentiment, friendship, in the exhalted position that it deserves. It is organized to carry practically in operation a common interchange of charity and good will, and to foster a more enlarged spirit of humanity by a well systemized discharge of the duties of benevolence. Perhaps there is no place where Odd Fellowship is seen to better advantage, or its best pledges are more sacredly kept than in the sick room, and it may well be the envy of any benevolent fraternity on the face of the earth. We predict a glorious future for Odd Fellowship in Quincy.

SUDDEN DEATH. The sad news of the sudden death of Mr. Isaiah White, a resident of Wollaston, has thrown a feeling of sadness over his large circle of friends and acquaintances in this town. Mr. White was making a business call at the residence of Mr. John F. Foss, at 30 Worcester Square, Boston, on Monday evening, and had just entered the hall, when, without any premonitory symptoms, he suddenly fell and instantly expired. He had been carrying on a large fruit store in Boston for the past twenty years, which had been conducted in a very successful manner. He has been stopping in Boston this winter, as has been his custom during the cold weather for the past few years. His wife was visiting their only daughter, who resides in Philadelphia, at the time of his death.

Mr. White was a native of South Quincy, his father owning the house now occupied by Mr. Abel Nutting, on Water street, who married one of the daughters. Mr. White leaves a widow and one daughter, who deeply lament the loss of a loving husband and a kind and indulgent father. The funeral takes place to-day at 12 o'clock, at Wollaston.

DIPTHERIA. We are sorry to learn that this dreaded disease is in our town. Last Saturday a son of Mr. Henry Brown, who lives on Chestnut street, died after an illness of a few hours. At Atlantic three children of Mr. Nelson C. Simmons became victims, six days only elapsing from the death of the first; until the third one succumbed to the fell destroyer. A fourth was prostrated with the disease but we are pleased to learn is recovering. The affliction of this family has been very severe, and they have the sympathy of friends and neighbors in this their sad bereavement.

FIRE. A large polishing shop, belonging to P. Hughes & Son, on Furnace street, West Quincy, was completely destroyed by fire on Wednesday morning. The alarm was sounded about one o'clock, and was quickly responded to by the department, but the fire had gained such headway that the building and contents were completely destroyed. Several fine monuments were in the building. The fire it is thought was caused by an incendiary. Loss about $2,500; insured for $1,500.

He is comfortable and improving as fast as can be expected.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

On Sunday services were held for the first time in the vestry of the Washington street Congregational Church, Rev. J. L. Harris preached an appropriate sermon from the text found in 1st Corinthians, 3d chapter, 9th verse. Sunday evening the pastor gave a New Year's sermon on the value of time.

The church is nearly finished and will probably be dedicated in about three weeks.

THIS AND THAT.

New Year's Day was uneventful and quiet here; though the weather was dull and slightly discouraging, many wishes for a "Happy New Year" were being exchanged and everyone seemed in good spirits. We suppose that the usual number of good resolutions were made. May they be kept better than is usually the case,—in short may the year of '84 be a prosperous one to all.

The Vulture Engine Company held its second assembly on the 28th ult. A very pleasant time was enjoyed. The ball will probably come off about the 20th inst. The regular monthly meeting will occur on Monday evening.

Some of our young folks got together and watched the old year out and the new year in.

The heavy rain on Wednesday was a blessing in many ways.

The skating is good on river and pond.

NEW STORE. Mr. G. F. Wilson opens his splendid new store on Hancock street this morning. He has had it built expressly to accommodate his large grocery and provision business, and has everything arranged for neatness and convenience, from cellar to chambers. His customers, particularly the ladies, will find it more pleasant there to do their marketing, than in the old crowded and inconvenient place.

Mr. Wilson has purchased a large and splendid stock of new goods, which he will open to his trade to-day, and those in want of the best the market affords will do well to call at this new stand, and see old and familiar faces in new places.

Massachusetts Legislature.

Both branches of the Legislature met on Wednesday last, and organized promptly by the re-election of Hon. George A. Bruce, as President, and Stephen N. Gifford as Clerk, of the Senate. George A. Marden, of Lowell, was elected Speaker of the House, and Edward A. McLaughlin, Clerk.

The House then appointed a committee of eight, which included our townsman, William N. Eaton, Esq., to inform the Senate that the House had organized.

A committee of six, which included Wm. G. A. Pattee, of Quincy, was appointed to receive, sort and count votes for sergeant-of-arms, and they reported O. F. Mitchell, Esq., elected. At 1.45 a procession was formed, consisting of the Governor and Council, and members of the Legislature, for a march to the Columbus avenue Universalist Church, where the election sermon was delivered by Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D.

For the Patriot.

Atlantic Items.

Several residents have interested themselves in a project to build a union chapel in Atlantic. On Wednesday evening of this week a meeting was to be held at the school-house to help forward the good work, but owing to a small attendance, because of the inclement weather, no business was transacted. Another meeting will be held very soon, and it is hoped that all will find it convenient to be present.

Diphtheria and other diseases of a similar character seldom visits our village, but at the present time three or more families are afflicted with this dreadful ailment. Three children of Mr. Simmons, who resides upon Appleton street have died, and another is hardly expected to recover.

The J. Q. Adams Chemical Engine responded to the alarm from box 46, on Wednesday morning, and after considerable difficulty reached the scene of the fire. On the way back the machine was "stalled" in the deep snow on Robertson street, and though three horses were drawing the engine, in order to pull through it became necessary to discharge both generators, thus reducing the weight.

Mr. Theodore Parker, of Burlington, Ia., son of our esteemed citizen, Mr. Chase Parker, is here for a brief visit.

District Court, Quincy.

William Trainor of Quincy, second drunk, fined $3 and costs.

Taft's in Boston.

Mr. G. S. Taft, the son of the veteran O. A. Taft, has been persuaded that the highest interests of the public demand that the exquisite dinners and entertainment which are attainable at Point Shirley in the summer months should be attainable in Boston when the weather compels them to find a refuge within the limits of the metropolis. With the intention of meeting this requirement Mr. Taft has fitted up with exquisite taste the building No. 6 Norfolk Place, where he proposes to minister to that class of citizens who are distinguished by their refined and cultivated appetites. The location selected is in the vicinity of the theatres, and just far enough from Washington street to afford that comfortable quiet which is necessary to good digestion, and the complete enjoyment of all the delicacies the season affords. The exterior front would be an object of remark if it were upon any principal avenue of the city where it could be seen to advantage. The interior exhibits the highest achievements of the architect and decorator. The lower or street floor is adapted for serving a business lunch, which will be laid from 11 to 3 o'clock. The second and third floors are divided into private dining-rooms, and the fifth is cut up into small card rooms, which, when required, may be used for dining-rooms. On the floors above are a few sleeping apartments for the accommodation of those who may wish to prolong their festivities until the small hours of the morning.

The designing and work of construction, inside and out, the frescoing, chandeliers, etc., were under the supervision of the architect, John Lyman Faxon, of Quincy, and cannot fail to excite the admiration of all those who appreciate the beauties of art. The manner in which the rooms are grouped so as to be used singly or in connection with each other, suggests an excellent taste, and the decorations are in the highest degree appropriate, whether judgment is formed from an inspection of the dining or card rooms. The furnishings are rich and elegant, and challenge comparison; and the pictures upon the [illegible] Two of the oil paintings in the large dining hall on the second floor cost $1,500, and are among the finest to be found in Boston.

SEWERAGE. Boston's improved sewerage system was put into practical operation on New Year's day, and is said to be one of the greatest engineering feats of the age. Several years have been spent in constructing the same, and it has cost the city $4,544,272. The large reservoir at Moon island at North Quincy, where the sewerage is discharged into the bay, holds 25,000,000 gallons.

NEW YEAR'S PARTY. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Grant gave a New Year's party at their residence on Coddington street, on Tuesday evening. Among the invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Gibbs, of Milton, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tarrell, of Wollaston. The evening was passed in playing games and dancing. Music was furnished by Mr. J. Gibbs, and not until the small hours in the morn were they seen wending their way home, well satisfied with their evening's entertainment.

☞ The strike at M. C. Dizer & Co.'s factory at East Weymouth has ended. The firm called the lasters in and paid them off, one week in advance of the regular pay day, and gave them a written discharge, which virtually ends the strike, and they are now hiring new lasters.

New Year's in New York.

DEAR EDITOR:—Perhaps some of your readers would be interested to hear how New Year's Eve and New Year's Day is spent in New York, and I promise them it is quite unlike what we see in New England.

The custom to watch the "old year out and the new year in" is quite general; old and young join in the observance, each in ways which suit his inclinations best. Some religiously, at watch-meeting service; some socially, at dancing; some in merry-making upon the streets. It is a grand sight to see the multitudes who gather about Old Trinity Church to listen to the chimes at midnight, and joining in lusty singing of the choruses. Whole families may be seen in the crowd. But the merriest part of the sport, or at least the loudest part of it, is carried on by the city youths, who turn out en masse to make a night of it. But I am too much of a Yankee and Puritan to take much delight in active participation in these general frolicings in progress outside, and so I stop within and pass the hours reading by my bright fireside. By 11 o'clock the clamor commences, and grows in volume till midnight, when it breaks into a tremendous roar that makes the welkin ring. The banging of guns, beating of gongs, tooting of steam whistles from land and water, added to the blasts from thousands of fish-horns, and such shouts as must make even the youthful throats and lungs which produce them ache, create such a commotion as approaches nearer to what in childhood I fancied Gabriel's blast must be, minus the unpleasant impressions, than anything I have heard before. The roar continues for the space of five minutes, and dull indeed must that soul be which will not kindle with something of the mirth of the clamorous glad ushering in of the new-born year.

This unanimous roar over, the merry-makers gather in parties of ten or fifteen, and commence a sort of general serenading of acquaintances, and lucky or unlucky, as the case may strike you, you may count yourself if the frolicers number among them, and it is very likely they do, someone who knows you, for they will surely remember you, and collecting before your house some time later, after you have retired, and the signal given, a blasting of horns, cracking of pistol shots, tooting of whistles and cat-calling will startle you from your slumber, and nothing will appease these midnight serenaders till they have compelled you to crawl from your warm bed, open your window and peep out in your night-cap, and be unceremoniously hailed by name, when, satisfied and victorious, they depart for fresh conquests. And thus through the night they revel, these pardonable rascals, mindless of the weather, till the gray of dawn, when they seek their beds for a few hours' slumber, when they will arise to appear in a contrasted role—that of young gallants paying their respects to their lady friends.

"With gold of joys and with iron of sorrows,
Freighted and filled, shall the new year glide,
Through storm and sunshine to new to-morrows
And unknown havens o'er Time's fierce tide.
The bells for the dead old year are knelling,
But we drown them all in our lusty cheer,
As the sails in the winds of our hope are swelling.
Happy New Year!

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

The observance of this day in our city is unlike anything elsewhere. It is more generally regarded than either Independence, Thanksgiving or Christmas days, and might be properly called "The Ladies' Reception Day." Since the days of old Dutch governors, when the people, old and young, together spent the day in munching sweetmeats and wishing each other pleasant things, the day has been devoted to the rights and expressions of friendship, and on no other day, and probably not on all the other days of the year, is there so much of devotion and flattery bestowed on the ladies as on New Year's Day, and on no other day are they called upon to exercise their social charms so much. The day is set apart by the ladies for the reception and entertainment of their friends of the opposite sex. An elaborate table is loaded with luxuries, both solid and liquid, for their refreshment. Rich ornamental cakes, fruit, nuts, bon-bons, wine, coffee, etc., etc., are arranged in tasteful profusion, and the rooms are decorated with evergreens and flowers. The ladies attired in full dress, setting off their fair forms and faces, are ready as early as eleven o'clock in the morning for the reception of their visitors, and groups of nicely-dressed gentlemen begin to arrive in twos and threes, and are admitted by a servant who relieves them of their outside clothing and presents their cards to the hostess, when they are ushered into the drawing-room, where they meet other groups of gentlemen whom they have never seen before, and never expect to meet again, and to each of whom they are ceremoniously introduced by the lady. The stereotyped greetings: "I wish you a happy New Year!" and "Thank you, I wish the same to you, and many returns of the day!" are exchanged, and all are invited to partake of the bountiful spread, which, if they are polite and wise, they do—very sparingly. After five or ten minutes

As the day advances the fashionable streets and avenues present a brilliant spectacle. Gay equipages, occupied by stylishly-dressed young men, pass and repass; and on the side-walks are throngs of others, all bent on the same social errands. Scarcely a lady can be seen. And thus through the hours of the day, and till late at night, the gentlemen keep up their calling from place to place, some in carriages, some on foot, as their means or disposition incline them; and thus the ladies receive, entertain and dismiss, till the last caller has departed, and worn out with her arduous social duties of the day, she sits down among the flowers, which are faded, and in the midst of the disorder which the visitors have left behind, and compares the cards of the callers of the day with those of the callers of other years. She misses some names. Some are estranged, some have dropped out of society, some have removed, and some are dead. [illegible] of time,

"Oh! a wonderful stream is the river [illegible]
As it runs through the realm of years,
With a faultless rythm and musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime,
As it bends in the [illegible] of years."

"Pilot of souls! though the broad earth be riven
With grievous [illegible]; though our New Year bark
Be shattered by storm and by wild winds driven,
Steer those we love [illegible] own sea mark!
Master of Life, whatever may befall us,
Save from the death true hearts we hold dear,
For whom we implore though quick death shall call us,
A Happy New Year!"

Yours, [illegible]ly, F. R. L.

Wollaston.

Mr. A. G. Olney gave a New Year's cheer to the police officers of the town, at his residence on Tuesday evening last. Nearly all the officers were present, including W. M. French, and a very jolly time was enjoyed. A bountiful table was spread, but being rather "a puny set of men," of course they would not eat much, and were obliged to smoke to worry it down.

Hon Charles W. Slack has commenced building a nice house on Warren avenue, on land formerly owned by Mr. Bemis. It will be quite an ornament to the street when completed. Mr. Pinkham is also making preparations to build a new house as soon as Spring opens.

The sudden death of Mr. Isaiah White, for many years a resident of this village, has cast a gloom over many in this place. He will long be remembered for his many kind deeds.

The Knights of Honor at their last meeting re-elected E. E. Williamson as Dictator. The officers will be publicly installed at Wollaston Hall, on Monday evening next; and a fine entertainment has been arranged, including an address by the Grand Dictator.

The Knights and Ladies of Honor re-elected Charles R. Sherman, Protector; and judging from reports, the evenings spent at the lodge meetings are very enjoyable.

The plan of making New Year's calls, inaugurated here by K. and L. of Honor, was somewhat enjoyed on Tuesday. The houses of Mrs. Frank P. Waterhouse, Mrs. H. T. Whitman, Mrs. James C. Bates, Mrs. W. H. Brasee, Mrs. C. H. Brigham, Mrs. T. Armstrong, Mrs. C. R. Sherman, Mrs. W. C. Pierce, Mrs. H. O. Fairbanks, Mrs. H. C. Blossom, Miss Laura King, and Miss Carrie Cushman, were kept open, and their smiling faces (and appetizing refreshments) will long be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to be numbered upon their list of friends.

The Wollaston Hotel, which has been quite full the past summer and fail, has now a few rooms to let.

All hands are now looking forward to the "leap year dance," and we predict its success, as the ladies in charge are wide awake, and seem determined to give some of the gentlemen a chance to wait for the inquiry, "will you favor me with a waltz?"

Samuel R. Brown is confined to his house by sickness, and we learn that his wife, while administring to his wants, met recently with a painful accident by burning her arm quite severely. NEWPORT.

A BANK STORY. The following is a correct story in connection with the Salem Savings Bank. The original depositor lived at that time in Marblehead, and the interested parties now live in Boston. In 1823, a woman deposited $100, and it remained untouched until 1867, when it had accumulated so that there was $488.21 to her credit above the lawful amount of $1000. The woman was hunted up and paid the overplus. The $1000 still remained, and, in 1869, she was paid $400.64, and upon Dec. 20th, ult., a brother was paid in interest on the deposit to the amount of 723.80, and the $1000 still remains on deposit. The curious part of the story is, that up to 1867, the woman never supposed she had more than $100 in the bank, as she simply deposited it for safety, and thought nothing about the interest part of it.—Marblehead Messenger.

NOT AGREEABLE. A well known clergyman in the north of England entertained recently a brother clergyman from some distance. The evening being unpropitious, he asked him to remain for the night. At dusk the clergyman asked his guest to step into the manse while he gave orders to have his conveyance ready in the morning. As the visitor entered the manse the clergyman's wife mistook him in the dusk for her husband, and, seizing the pulpit Bible, which was on the lobby table, brought the full weight of it across his shoulders, exclaiming emphatically, "Take that for asking the ugly wretch to stay all night."

FUNERAL SERVICES. The body of Captain Matthew Webb, who died in the whirlpool rapids of the Niagara river, will be exhumed January 7, in the presence of his widow, and again interred with proper funeral ceremonies. Mrs. Webb cannot afford the expense of removing the remains to Boston, as she intended. When the remains were placed in their present resting place last July there were no services.

HOTEL NANTASKET. Messrs Russell and Sturgis will be the proprietors of the Hotel Nantasket the ensuing season. Some very important improvements will be made. A new impetus will be given to the Nantasket Beach business by the building of an iron pier extending out to deep water, thus giving to exursionists an outside ocean trip. Mr. Newcomb of New York will be the contractor for the building of this pier.

UNSUCCESSFUL. As an evidence of the profitableness of newspapers, it is shown that the New York Graphic has sunk $779,500 in the few years of its existence, and the stock-holders have got tired of pouring their money into a sieve. Its assets however, are $40,000, so that it can pay about 5 per cent. of its indebtedness.

LUXURIES. Strawberries are in Savannah market. Although very early in the season, the fruit is grown in open ground just east of the city. The market opens at one dollar a basket.

Green peas are selling at Jacksonville, Fla., at fifteen cents per quart.

HOLIDAY GREETINGS

are in order till Twelfth Night, your next publication day, dear PATRIOT. My hearty good wishes to old friends in the office, and among your growing family of readers.

The snow blockade has hindered the enjoyment of the holiday season. Too much swearing and grumbling on the part of pedestrians, travelers, and drivers has been heard in our streets. If the estimate is correct that a first-class snow-storm costs this city a million dollars, then the five snow-storms in eight days have cost us as much as our Post Office. In an express office two days after Christmas, I heard an agent tell a lady who feared her present had been lost, "We have 3000 parcels not yet delivered." The embarrassment of business in all departments is incalculable.

BRIEF MENTION.

The lovers of living tongues, jealous of the disproportionate attention paid to dead ones, have formed a society the past week. A resolution was offered, but not passed, suggesting as a condition for B. A., ability to read French and German fluently.

Another new society is the "New York Anthropological Society," to prosecute researches in psychology and related themes of human life, in health and disease. The N. Y. Tribune says that this is the first of the kind in this country. I know of none, but it is a strange thing if it be so, for England has several. Eminent scholars and physicians were present, or represented by letters. They did your correspondent the honor to elect him President.

Mr. Beecher, last Friday, made a statement that the general and spiritual usefulness of Plymouth Church was never so great as now. This is in amusing contrast to what he said the week before, and reminds me of what his brother-in-law, Prof. Stowe, our Andover teacher in Greek, used to say about the evil effect of mince pie at supper, as related to the enjoyment of an evening prayer meeting.

The great "Atlantic," of the National Line was launched Saturday; 6000 tons, 450 feet long, 51 feet broad, with the saloon taking the whole breadth; speed, 18 knots, or nearly 21 miles an hour, with room for 300 first-class passengers, who will be elegantly accommodated forward of the engine. Electric appliances and other equipments will make this indeed an ocean queen.

Reply to Horace.

DEAR PATRIOT: Horace feels because I did not apply both texts of Proverbs to his case; I considered one verse sufficient for the occasion. I told Horace to tell your readers who knew of the Constitution of the British Parliament; he refers me to "the book written under the supervision of the British Government, by Hansard." I think the Trustees of the Public Library ought to get the book published under the supervision of the British Government, as one of the curiosities of literature. I have often heard demagogues in broadcloth declaim about the myth they call the "British Constitution," and have heard and read about the privileges of Parliament, which no body ever defined; and having serious doubts about the existence of a parliamentary Constitution, I applied to Horace for information on the subject. He says he is not English; I did not say he was born in England, but judging from his writing, he ought to have been.

He cannot understand what connection American events have with the subject; I am sorry for him. I referred to the American Patriots of 1776, as an example of the manner in which our common enemy, England, uses her powers to oppress every people over whom her government exercises control. Mr. Gladstone is Lord North revived; and he uses the same language to Mr. Parnell that Lord North used to Samuel Adams and John Hancock. But there are a great many Americans who, unlike Horace, take interest in the Irish question. They feel that an American, worthy of the name, will always give his sympathy and assistance to the down-trodden and oppressed, and expresses his hatred for the oppressor. Many of these men have no connection with Ireland, or Irishmen, except the tie of a common humanity, but many more are bound to Ireland by the ties of birth and blood. This large class feel very keenly the outrage and insult which is daily inflicted upon their kindred by an alien government, which has to expound and execute all their diabolic devices under the name and form of law,—such a consummate hypocrite as W. E. Gladstone.

Horace wishes me to publish Parnell's reply to Forster; if you will give me space in the PATRIOT I will do so. Horace has very evidently read only the Associated Press report, and how he can reconcile it to his conscience to publish a statement now that Forster's charges "remain undisputed to this day," would be surprising in any one but Horace. Horace speaks of the Land League Journal of which Mr. Parnell is proprietor. I hope it will not surprise your readers to learn that there is no such paper published,—Horace is so accurate.

Horace is anxious to know what Patrick Egan did with the funds of the League. If he was a subscriber to the fund, he might be entitled to ask such a question; if so he can have all the information necessary by application to the party he subscribed to; if he has never given a cent to the fund it need not matter to him how it was spent. Lady Flora Dixie allowed herself to be made the mouthpiece of Richard Pigott's slanders, and was very anxious about the purity of the Land League until she told one story that was too palpably false; since then she has retired, but it seems that she has one disciple in Quincy who calls Patrick Eagan a skedaddler. Can this be credulity on the part of Horace.

Patrick Egan, as treasurer of the Land League, received large sums of money; when law in Ireland was abolished by proclamation, and the liberty of every man was at the mercy of Dublin Castle, Mr. Egan, knowing well that Mr. Gladstone had no scruples of conscience about robbing a man, removed himself and the funds in his possession to France, where he found protection. He expended a large amount of money, and when he resigned his position as treasurer, he paid the balance on hand to his successor. He had his accounts audited by a committee, of whom John Dillon was one, and in their report a full account of all receipts and expenditures was given, and the committee vouched for the honesty of Mr. Egan, and the accuracy of his books. This report has been published repeatedly in all the papers, except, perhaps, Horace's copy—and it has been received by the public generally as correct. The details were not published, to the great disgust of Lady Dixie, Mr. Forster, Mr. Pigott, and Horace. It would no doubt be a great satisfaction to Mr. Forster, and his successors, to know exactly how the money was spent, but the world must wait awhile for the information. The men who subscribed the money are all satisfied that it was properly expended,—and those who have not subscribed should remain silent about the matter.

Horace regrets having to repeat his assertions. He ought to regret having made any, until he had satisfied himself that his assertions had some basis. His allusion to the irreconcilable, who holds an important and lucrative position in connection with the National League is not very clear, but I suppose he means Ciare. In this matter he is as accurate as he is on the other subjects he treats of. He ought to know that the Land League no longer exists. It was dissolved by a proclamation from Mr. Gladstone's Lord Lieutenant, declaring it an illegal body. I have the honor to be an officer in a very humble position, in the "Irish National League of America," the body that was organized in Philadelphia last April. It is a very lucrative position, inasmuch as I have the privilege of paying my monthly dues, and such occasional subscriptions as the members deem expedient, into the hands of the treasurer. There is but one paid officer in the American organization—the national secretary; but, if I was a paid official, and earned my wages honestly, is it wrong, or dishonest? Horace is paid by somebody for work done by him; if he does his work faithfully he deserves his wages, and his attempt at a sneer does him no credit. Mr. Gladstone has a very lucrative position, and draws his pay regularly. Horace ought to inquire how much Mr. Gladstone expended in secret service for the last three years, and how and where it was spent. He would receive a funny reply.

Horace says that his part of the controversy is ended. I have no desire to continue it. I did not provoke it in the first place. Horace opened his attack by calling my notice of Dr. Everett's lecture "scurrilous." He charged me with gross and unpalatable ignorance. I did not follow his example, for I believe that a man who addresses the people, owes it to his readers to place his opinions before them in gentle language. How far I have succeeded in this, I leave your readers to judge.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.

The holiday season is a dull one politically. Still there has been no dearth of political gossip and criticism, Speaker Carlisle's committee appointments having furnished a text that is not yet exhausted. There is no committee in which the people have some interest, and, of course, personal have been analyzed with reference to the action the committees may be expected to take in relation to legislation committed to their charge. The Ways and Means Committee is praised and censured; that on Banking and Currency has also its advocates and detractors. This committee is in favor because a certain man is at the head, and various others are denounced because certain men who ought to be at the heads of them are not. Notwithstanding there are individual cases of hardship and dissatisfaction, the verdict of the non-partisan element of the country is, that Mr. Carlisle has done well under his enormous responsibility.

Nor has there been a complete stagnancy in political circles. Several of the new committees have held meetings at the Capitol, and mapped out plans for future procedure. Mr. Randall called a meeting of the Appropriation Committee, and in half an hour after the committees were announced. When it met last Wednesday, and selected three bills for the action of Congress, the first result of the session was begun. The people, aside from the small class whose business it is to handle the material, know how great is the population of work awaiting Congress, or how steadily the quantity is increasing. Measures proposing legislation introduced during the first month of this Congress are six hundred per cent. greater than those introduced during the first month of the previous Congress. One House Committee alone, of the fifty-seven, has fifty-eight eighty-four bills and some resolutions.

Mr. Morrison has foreshadowed his policy as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in a talk, in which he said the Democrats were determined upon a reduction of the sugar tariff, and they hoped to push such a bill through the committee before the House some time in January. The contemplated raid on sugar is a courageous move, and will likely alienate the Louisiana Democracy, to whom a high tariff on sugar is decidedly a "local issue." This much is admitted, but a compensating increase of strength in states which have been Republican on sections is counted on. The Democrats in their course in this matter will be very carefully watched. The preliminary is an interesting one, and its progress in the coming campaign will introduce an element of uncertainty as to the result, which will tend to make the canvass very exciting.

A newly published Congressional directory, the largest autobiography of Representative Rosecrans, of California; the shortest, that of Representative Skinner, of North Carolina. The oldest Senator is Morrill, of Vermont, the youngest, Kenna, of West Virginia. The oldest and youngest representatives are Judge Kelley and Mr. Post, both of Pennsylvania, born respectively in 1814 and 1854.

But I will turn from politics to "sweet charity," which has been a feature of the week in Washington. Friday was a field day, when two thousand hungry children were fed by the Christmas Club. I attended the festivities, which were held at the National Rifles Armory on G street, but the same scenes were witnessed at all the Club dinners. At the appointed hour the urchins began to present their tickets at the door and creep timidly into the dining-hall as if they were crawling under a circus tent. There were children of all sizes, all ages, all styles of prettiness and ugliness; there were children on crutches, children club-footed, and children otherwise deformed; children dressed in every variety of garment, but all very poor. They were brought in from the narrow alleys and squalid quarters of the city, and the good cheer they enjoyed that day had never before been included in their range of possibilities. After dinner they were marched up stairs to the ball room, where were three heavily laden Christmas trees. To lively music by the Marine Band, the children received their presents. Upon leaving the hall each child was given a car ticket and a tin horn. Each horn was thoroughly tested as it was taken from the big box, making the noise deafening. Nellie Arthur, the President's young daughter, had been assigned a prominent part in the programme, and the President entered the hall during the festivities, and received an ovation. ADAMS.

Priscilla's Reply.

DEAR PATRIOT:

—"It is the fate of a woman,
Long to be patient and silent, like a ghost that is speechless;
Till some questioning voice dissolves the spell of its silence."

That "Citizen" assumed the role of "questioning voice," is an acknowledged fact; then who but himself is to blame for dissolving the "spell of silence" that proverbially surrounds a woman.

If the cause of humanity were harmed by Priscilla, that were indeed a matter for regret. But, ah! we know "Citizen" and esteem him, and feel that his nature is noble. If the ship were in danger, such men would be the last to desert it. If to be one of a number in warfare, implicit obedience, the only condition, once promised, it would be given even unto death. Then, if true, or trying to be true, to principle and promise of our own, shall we fret because soldiers fighting under another flag, keep their eyes steadfastly towards a beloved Captain and follow his lead, though to us looking "through a glass darkly" (as until then we must look) the battle seems without purpose or reason?

A moment more. Without doubt, the gentle Priscilla, the Puritan maiden, as "Citizen" suggests, would have said,

"Here to the houseless child of want,
My door is open still;
And though my portion is but scant,
I give it with good will."

Equally without doubt the above sentiment would have been heartily echoed by the Puritan maron, Priscilla; or to be lucid, if not genteel,

MRS. JOHN ALDEN.

Read what V. I. Foote, of New Haven, says in another column.

We give below the programme for the week of prayer as arranged by the Alliance, commencing on Monday next and ending with Saturday:

Monday, 7: Praise and thanksgiving—For God's special providence, Christ's marked favor and the Holy Spirit's gracious work.

Tuesday, 8: Humiliation and confession—For personal failings; for social vices, as intemperance; for the secular Spirit in the church; for prevailing skepticism and religious indifference.

Wednesday, 9: Prayer for families and instructors of youth—For parental fidelity in household training; for pious watchcare in schools and colleges; for spiritual influence in Christian associations of youth, and for early conversions in Sunday schools.

Thursday, 10: Prayer for the church of Christ—For a prayerful and laborious ministry; for consecration and cooperation in members; for early devotion in educated youths, and for the divine blessing in winning the worldly.

Friday, 11: Prayer for nations—For legislators, that statutes may be conformed to divine law; for rulers, that they may conscientiously administer government; for peace and conciliation between nations, and for popular integrity in the duties of citizens.

Saturday, 12: Prayer for home and foreign missions—For missionaries, that they may be sustained in trials and prove efficient in labors; for heathens, Mohammedans and Israelites, that they may be won to Christ.

RAFFLES. The Boston Journal of Tuesday says, "The decided action of a Staten Island clergyman in resigning his position as pastor, because a raffle was introduced against his will at a church fair, is worthy of respectful notice. The Island had almost an epidemic of church raffles. The Roman Catholic Church had votes cast to decide which among the many popular liquor stores on the Island was the favorite. The Methodist Church raffled for an umbrella and finally the Church of the Ascension placed a watch to be raffled for. This was the cause of the clergyman's indignant protest."

☞ Miss Hattie Key, who was married in Washington, December 17, to Captain Reynard of the French army, wore a veil which was fastened to the head with a gold band studed with rosettes of diamonds, the groom's gift. In addition to this the groom brought his bride, the evening before the ceremony, a silk stocking, filled with tiny gold pieces as a Christmas gift.

THE COUNTY'S VALUATION. From the twenty-third annual abstract of polls and valuation to May 1st, 1883, we learn the following in regard to Norfolk County: Valuation of personal estate, $33,253,887; real estate, $60,819,972; total valuation, $94,073,859. The report shows an increase in the total valuation over 1882 of $3,088,532. This makes a very good showing.

☞ A FASHION authority says that bridal tours are no longer fashionable. It is the proper figure now to wait for a year or two to see if the husband and wife are going to live together.

☞ The personal and real property of Massachusetts, as shown by the valuation returns for the year 1883, is valued at $1,731,297,051, an increase of $47,083,638 over that of 1882.

NO CURE. NO PAY! Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam, when once used, takes the place of all others. See our advertising columns. Nov. 10.—1y

Many people imagine they have consumption when in reality they only have a bad cold, which can easily be cured by proper care and the right kind of medicine. We could fill columns with testimonials, but do not believe in that way of advertising, our idea is to let everybody that is afflicted with a cough try for themselves, and is not perfectly satisfied, return the empty bottle of the dealer of whom it was bought and receive their money back.

Song for the New Year.

The new year's born,
The old, old year is dead,
The new year's born,
Our cares and sorrows fled.

Our hopes are bright,
Our hearts are light,
We sing the new-born year.

'Tis glad, 'tis new,
O may't be true;
We sing the new-born year!

Yea, while me may,
Let us be gay,
And sing the new-born year!
Yea, while we may,
We'll sing the new-born year!

A. N. DE MENIL.

Farm and Garden.

Commercial Fertilizers.

Below we give the substance of a paper read by Elbridge Cushman, of Lakeville, before a recent meeting of the State Board of Agriculture:

"Well I have known several men to become wealthy by the manufacture and sale of commercial fertilizers, I have yet to learn of a common farmer who has made much money by their use. I wish to be clearly understood upon this point. I neither condemn the goods nor the men engaged in their manufacture and sale. That there are many brands that are just what they purport to be I have no doubt, and no intelligent farmer at this day would entirely discard their use or deny at times their magical effects. What I would say is that I believe that the plant food that they contain can be purchased by the common farmer cheaper in another form, and at the price for which they are sold there can be but little margin for profit in the production of the common field crops. The fact is, we are compelled to pay too much for the mixing. Again, we may be buying elements and applying them to soils for the production of crops that the plant does not want, and will not assimilate, or perhaps the soil may already possess it in abundance.

"It may be well to bear in mind that, however bulky commercial fertilizers may be, or whatever may be their color or order, their value like all other manures, depends upon the availability and solubility of just three elements. One of these is nitrogen, the most costly of the three. I have been at a loss to learn how the common farmer can conduct any experiments with this element alone that can result in any great practical advantage. We are told that in its pure form it is colorless and odorless, and in fact cannot be approached by either of the senses. Neither are the doctors fully agreed upon just how it enters the plant structure. It cannot be handled unless confined in some strong and powerful base, and then we are at a loss where to place it to make it most available. I have decided not to invest largely in this shy element until we are better acquainted, getting what I can, however, from cottonseed meal and stable manure, both of which, we are told are rich in nitrogen. But we believe the purely nitrogenous manures are not considered as essential as formerly, except where an excessive leaf department is desired.

"Another of the three wanting elements—phosphoric acid,—may be obtained from ground bone or phosphaltic rock, which is composed of the bones and teeth of prehistoric animals. Nearly all of this rock quarried in Canada, and about three-fourths of that taken from the South Carolina beds, is exported to England. Our farmers can purchase the bone or the rock nearly or quite as cheaply as the manufacturers or fertilizers can.

"Another, and the remaining one of the three elements to be purchased is potash. This may be bought in wood ashes or the potash salts.

Now, it requires no extensive knowledge of agricultural chemistry to go into the market and ascertain where fine ground bone or phosphaltic rock, wood ashes or muriate of potash can be purchased the cheapest. Then any farmer can mix them on his own barn floor, and use them in proportion as demanded by the soils upon which they are to be applied, and the crops to be produced.

BIG SALE. One of the largest cattle sales on record was consummated at Denver, recently. H. D. & J. W. Snyder & Co., of that city, bought of Snyder Bros., of Georgetown, Texas, over 29,000 head of cattle and 400 horses for a consideration of $600,000 cash. The former firm now owns nearly 54,000 head of cattle, and 1000 horses.

☞ A meeting of farmers interested in ensilage will be held at 55 Beekman street, New York, Wednesday, Jan. 23d, at 12 o'clock. All interested in this subject are invited to attend without further notice.

Anecdotes.

"Where does history tell you the famous Bishop Latimer was burned?" asked a teacher of a class.

"Joshua knows," said a little girl at the foot of the class.

"Well," said the teacher, "if Joshua knows, he may tell."

"In the fire!" replied Joshua, looking very grave and wise.

"How is Johnnie doing at school?" asked a lady of Johnnie's mother during a call.

"Splendidly. He talks in two languages now."

"Dear me; what are they; French or German?"

"Oh, no. English and profane."

A newly married lady was telling another how nicely her husband could write. "Oh, you should just see some of his love-letters."

"Yes, I know," was the freezing reply; "I've got a bushel of them in my trunk."

"No, papa, I do not wish to marry, yet. What I want is a man who does not drink, smoke, chew, snuff, go out nights, gamble, bet, over-eat, etc., in short, a man with no vices, and one who is always good."

"My daughter," said Mr. Dusenbury, "you are but a stranger here, heaven is your home."

"Are your domestic relations agreeable?" was the question put to an unhappy looking specimen of humanity.

"Oh, my domestic relations are all right," he said; "it is my wife's relations that are causing the trouble."

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

Prohibitory Convention.

The following resolutions of the prohibitory convention, held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 27th, may be found interesting:—

Whereas, The manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as beverages derange law and society; instigating crime, inflaming lust, crippling industry, impoverishing and desolating homes, debasing politics, debauching legislators, corrupting the sanctities of religion, and degrading and imbruting men; and

Whereas, The concurrent testimony of all civilization proclaims this as its giant evil, and the prolific source of nearly all other evils which retard its progress; inflicting greater calamities on mankind, the premier of England declares, than "three great historical scourges, war, pestilence and famine," and

Whereas, The statesmanship of the world agrees that this frightful evil imperatively demands the attention of legislators and the restrictions of law; and

Whereas, Saloons, bar-rooms, and public places, for the sale of intoxicating drinks, are no possible benefit to any community, but are public nuisances, breeding disturbance of the peace, and corrupting morals; and

Whereas, Any claim for the toleration of such places of sale, even by the warmest partisan, must be based on the fact of a corrupt and vicious state of society; and

Whereas, The ratio of crimes in the states where liquor saloons are allowed by law is one hundred per cent. in excess of those states where they are prohibited; and

Whereas, While the internal revenue receipts from the manufacture and sale of liquors show that the average amount for each individual in the nation, paid to the general government, is $1.71, the same returns show three prohibitory states pay but five cents and seven and two-thirds mills for each person in their population; and

Whereas, The statistics of our state, after due allowance for growth in population, show that the result of license legislation has been to increase the number of paupers one hundred per cent. over the same number of years of prohibitory legislation, and further reveal the fact that under local option, in our towns and cities where the sale of liquors has been licensed, the cost of pauperism has increased three hundred per cent. over those where such sale has been prohibited; and

Whereas, The legal voters of 256 out of the 346 towns and cities which compose this Commonwealth, having refused to license dramshops in their communities, it is but just to infer that the deliberate judgment of a majority of our citizens is in favor of prohibition; and

Whereas, The constitution of our state in its preamble declares: "The end of the institution, maintenance and administration of government, is to secure the existence of the body politic, to protect it, and to furnish the individuals who compose it with the power of enjoying their natural rights and the blessings of life;" and whenever these great objects are not obtained, the people have a right to alter the government, and to take measures necessary for their safety, prosperity and happiness.

Household Receipts.

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING. One-half pound of bread crumbs, pour over them one pint of boiling milk; when cool add one-quarter pound suet chopped fine, one-half pound seedless raisins, dredged with flour, one-half pound of currants, washed and dried, one-half pound of sugar, three ounces of citron, chopped fine, three eggs, well-beaten, one-half tea-spoonful of salt, two grated nutmegs, one tablespoonful of ground cinnamon, one table-spoonful of ground mace, one-half gill of brandy; mix well; add last three tea-spoonfuls of yeast powder; bake two hours in a moderately hot oven; before it begins to brown, stir from the bottom; eat warm with warm sauce.

SAUSAGE ROLLS. Make a light, puffy paste crust with beef drippings or good lard; roll out about a quarter of an inch thick and in oblong pieces, and place a spoonful of sausage meat or cold meat of any kind chopped very fine and well seasoned on each piece of paste, roll up in shape of a sausage, brush the ends with egg to make them stick together. Bake in a quick oven, brush over with beaten egg before sending to the oven. This is a good way of using up remnants of fish or any kind of meat.

☞ A good way to use the yolks of eggs when you have them left after making cake with the whites, is to keep them in a cool place; in the morning beat them well, and dip slices of bread in them and fry brown. Stale bread may be used for this.

☞ A slightly damp cloth rubbed over a dusty carpet brightens it wonderfully and gathers all the dust. This is an excellent way to cleanse the floor of an invalid's room, where noise and dust are objectionable.

Conundrums.

Why is a good wife always worth five shillings?—She is a crown to her husband.

Why is a colt like an egg?—It's of no use till it's broken.

What is the difference between an auction and sea-sickness?—One is a sale of effects, and the other the effects of a sail.

When are two apples alike?—When they are paired (pared).

When is your tooth not a tooth?—When it is a king (aching).

Why is a trick of legerdemain like declining an offer of marriage.—It is a slight of hand.

Why are the poor of Ireland like a carpet?—They are kept down by tax (tacks).

Which are the best kinds of money?—Ready money and matrimony.

DECORATIONS AND SOUVENIRS. Detach the notice from your bottle of MORSE YELLOW DOCK, and mail per directions on each bottle, and thus secure an assortment of our elegant decorative Advertisements, Souvenirs, &c.
M. Y. D. SYRUP CO.

This and That.

☞ We are oftener more cruelly robbed by those who steal into our hearts than by those who break into our houses.

☞ "Where do you suppose that man is driving?" inquired a gentleman, pointing to a flashily dressed fellow behind a stylish team. "Into bankruptcy," was the quick reply of a bystander.

☞ "O, ma!" exclaimed a little girl, glancing at the steam-gauge on a stationary engine. "It's sixty o'clock. I didn't know it ever got so late as that."

☞ Jenkins' hat blew into the swill barrel. He fished it out but said "it looked too offal to wear down town."

☞ A Maine paper tells us about little Josephine, who, though naughty, was very nice and clever. Being accused of telling a fib, she at first denied the charge, and afterward said by way of extenuation: "Well, suppose I did lie; everybody lies but God and George Washington." Josephine was asked if she had said her prayers. She replied: "No; I have to take medicine, and that is enough without saying my prayers."

☞ A boy who had been brought up in a family that was accustomed to be aroused every morning by an alarm clock, was told that he would be given a watch for his birthday present, and was asked what kind of a watch he would prefer.

"Oh," says he, "please buy me one of those silent watches of the night' that I hear so much about."

Miscellany.

The Life of the Editor.

One of the beauties and charms of an editor's life is his dead-heading it on all occasions. To one who has ever feasted on the sweets of that bliss can begin to take in the glory of its happiness. He does $100 worth of advertising for a railroad, gets a "pass" for a year, rides $25 worth and then he is looked upon as a deadhead or a half-blown dead-beat. He "puffs" a concert troupe $10 worth and gets $1 in complimentaries, and is thus passed "free." If the hall is crowded he is begrudged the room he occupies, for if his complimentaries were paying tickets the troupe would be so much in pocket. He blows and puffs a church festival free to any desired extent, and does the poster printing at half rates, and rarely gets a "thank you" for it. It goes as part of his duty as editor. He does more work gratuitously for the town and community than all the rest of the population put together, and gets cursed for it all while in many instances a man who donates a few dollars to a Fourth of July celebration, base ball club, or church, is gratefully remembered. Oh, it is a sweet thing to be an editor. He passes "free," you know.—Franklin Sentinel.

My Little Brother is Good.

Johnny was a very wicked boy, and his mother sent him to Sunday School to see if it would do him any good.

"What is your name?" asked the teacher.

"John Prentice Jimson, ma'm."

"Are you a good boy?"

"Mother says I'm a wicked wretch, and I s'pose she knows."

"What do you do that is so bad?"

"Oh, mos' everything; I go in swimmin', and tell mother I got my hair wet under the hydrant, and I hooks watermelons out of the wagon, and I chaw terbacker, and I lick the other boys when I don't git licked."

"That's enough. You are a very wicked boy, indeed. You lie and steal and have bad habits, and fight."

"Yes'm; I told you mother knowed what she was talkin' about. But my little brother never does any bad things like me."

"Ah, I'm glad to hear that. Now, Johnny, why is it your little brother never does anything bad, and you are so wicked?"

"I don't know, ma'm, but I guess it must be 'cause my little brother is only three weeks old, and he hain't had so much chance as I have. Let up on me till the little fellow has had a show."—Merchant Traveller.

"I don't understand why women dress in that way," said a man, pointing at a lady who passed along the street.

"I don't either," replied a bystander.

"That woman," continued the first speaker, "is dressed ridiculously. Her husband must be a fool."

"I know he is," said the bystander.

"Do you know him?"

"Oh, yes. I'm the blamed fool myself."

Poetry.

The Day of Small Things.

'Tis the little things, remember,
Make up our comfort here,
Sweet tokens of a better land
Upon life's ocean drear.
As bramble-berries once proclaimed
A continent so near!

'Tis not the mighty avalanche,
Though it is moisture still,
That comes to gladden Switzerland,
And her green valleys fill;
But shepherd lads and gentle flocks
Stoop down and kiss the rill.

A hand upon the shoulder laid,
A glance with kindness blent,
A burden raised, one spoken word,
A missive timely sent,
May bring in shores of gladness
Where joy is well nigh spent.

Salute the passing stranger
With smile or graceful nod;
Perhaps his heart is heavy,
And needeth not the rod,
And a smile may be, for it hath been,
A messenger from God.

If little things can bless us,
Ah! then 'tis equal true
That they may sore distress us,
And tears cannot undo,
Should thistle-seed be thickly sown
Life's narrow field space through.

Miscellany.

AUNT DEBORAH'S DRUDGE.

I had worked in Aunt Deborah's kitchen till nobody expected anything else of me. I had been retained in the house on sufferance at first, because Aunt Deborah's brother—my father—had run through all his property and was only distinguished for his shiftlessness and the size of his family. I suppose I was never missed from that superabundant home circle; anyway, they never came to see me, nor never inquired after me, that I know of.

Aunt Deborah had a great deal of company, being a rich and childless widow, and fond of society. But no one ever noticed me. I was not even snubbed, for it was not worth while to snub a mere drudge like me.

My cousin, Elsie Alston, was also a member of my aunt's family, but she received very different treatment from that which fell to my lot. Her father was auntie's favorite brother, therefore she was educated and was understood to be certain of a home and life's comforts always and of a fortune at Aunt Deborah's death.

Yet I did not envy my fortunate cousin, for while I was let alone, and at least took pride in the consciousness that I earned my own living, Elsie was continually being taunted with her dependence, and was kept in abject servility by constant threats of disinheritance.

Elsie would have been kind to me if I had allowed it, but I had a sort of pride which forbade me to receive patronage from anyone. I must be received on an equal footing or not at all. The only pleasure of my life was unlimited liberty to use the books in my aunt's great and ever increasing library. My rough work unfitted my hands for sewing, a fact for which I was sufficiently thankful, as it increased my leisure hours.

For the first two or three years of my stay I read novels exclusively. But one of the novels happened to have a noble and aspiring woman for its heroine. Somehow, the story of that life haunted me day and night, and I resolved to be something worthy of love and respect, whether I ever received my reward or not.

My first step was to map out a line of thought and conduct, and a course of reading. My intellectual nature was to be moulded by some of the best books in my aunt's library, and that ideal woman of whom I had read was to be my moral lever, lifting me into an atmosphere of self-forgetting holiness and love. I believed that if Aunt Deborah's drudge never had an opportunity of showing her devotion to the human race, her own soul would grow rich by the quiet effort.

It had been years since I formed this resolution when Mr. Gleason, forming one of a party of visitors, came to my aunt's house. But having company to cook for in the summer had come to be a settled thing, and all company meant to me was more drudgery and less time to read.

There was no prophetic voice to whisper to my heart on the morning of Mr. Gleason's arrigal that my fate, my hope and my despair, my blessing and my misery, had come to me. He was only one more guest, to be cooked for and to be waited upon by the drudge.

One day Elsie came to me with her sweet, weak face tearful and pleading.

"You must help me, Hannah," said she.

"Help you do what, child?"

"To keep Aunt Deborah's good-will and marry Mr. Gleason. You see Mr. Gleason is very poor, and if aunt threatens to disinherit me it may lessen my chances of getting him."

I think my astonishment and disgust showed themselves in my face as I answered:

"Have you so little confidence in your promised husband? So little faith, and yet willing to be his wife?"

She made an impatient gesture.

"You don't understand," she said, slowly and unblushingly. "He has not yet asked me to be his wife, but he will. I am sure he will. He does not love me very much, but when we are married and he sees my devotion it will be different."

Then she put her face in my apron and sobbed bitterly, and I knew by her tears that she had many misgivings.

"How can I help you?" I asked.

"I don't know," she replied through her tears; "but you can manage anything, I am sure. Aunt Deb. says you are to this house what grease is to an axle; that is, you seem to make everything run smoothly.

I could not help smiling as I replied:

"That is the first compliment I ever received, and I think it an exceedingly doubtful one. It cannot be expected that a kitchen drudge can successfully intermeddle in so delicate a matter as a love affair. Why, Elsie, I was never in love in all my life, and I daily pray heaven to preserve me from any such calamity, because the man I could love would not notice a person as I seem to be."

"I don't know," said Elsie, dubiously, and for the time forgetting her troubles. "There is something about you different from other servants—something strong and masterful; but I think you are troubled with morbid sensibilities. Promise that you'll help me if you can, Hannah."

"Yes, I can make that promise with perfect safety," I replied.

I formed a little plan of action very speedily. That evening I went to Aunt Deborah's room, and being bidden to enter, my first words were:

"I suppose you mean to leave Elsie penniless, if she marries a poor man."

"Yes," replied she, "I have secured for her the offer of a very eligible husband. If she does not see fit to accept him her future must be whatever she makes it."

"Then," said I, "Elsie's loss will be my gain, I hope. Don't fail to consider me after she has flung away her chances for some day becoming your heiress."

Aunt Deborah looked at me steadily for a moment, as if she felt inclined to think I was taking leave of my senses; then she sat in her chair and laughed loud; laughed until her round face was very red, indeed. As soon as she was in a condition to speak, she said:

"You had better have practiced awhile on someone else before you tried to overcome my purpose with strategy. Your face betrays you. You are not earnest enough, and you are most mortally ashamed of yourself. You know that I am contrary, and you know I am always angry with the person that wrongs Elsie; therefore, you thought that by making me angry with yourself, you could get me to vow eternal fidelity to Elsie. Not so. It is just as I have said. Elsie must obey me or she will not receive a penny from me. As for you, you have strength and ability to earn your own living. You know how to work, and do not care for the luxury that money brings. You do not need my money, and, further, I do not believe you want it."

I turned away with a bitter smile. How little did my aunt know of my tastes, only because I was too proud to make them known! And my intended aid to Elsie had proved a failure.

The next afternoon, having a leisure hour, I went into the library, intending to carry a book up to my room, but becoming interested in the volume I had selected, I forgot my purpose, and seated myself near a window in an obscure corner. Not long after the door opened, and Mr. Gleason entered. He spent some time searching among the books and at last turned to the door with empty hands and an air of disappointment. Then I arose and suggested that I might perhaps be able to find for him whatever he wanted.

He turned and surveyed me for a brief moment; then asked:

"Whom do I address?"

"Hannah Alston, the cook and floor-scrubber," I answered.

"I was searching for a work on architecture, and am disappointed at not finding it, because I wished to settle a warm argument, fast descending to dispute, which I left in full progress in the drawing-room. I am sure I could establish my point, if I had the book I saw here yesterday."

I returned to the afore-mentioned corner, and produced the volume I had been perusing with so much interest.

"This is probably what you were looking for, sir," I said.

He took the volume from my hand with evident pleasure, and just as evident surprise.

"Ladies do not usually care for this sort of literature," he said, apologetically, when he saw that I had read his face.

I replied:

"Ladies have little incentive to care for such things, because society promptly and most emphatically discourages all such indications of strong mindedness. Of course, it can make no difference to a woman whether the house she lives in is built in Corinthian, Doric, or Gothic style, or has no style at all. In her affectation of pretty, childlike simplicity, she is considered very interesting, and if she can be interesting, why need she aspire to become intelligent?"

"I think you are mistaken, Miss Alston. I think the days when a woman was admired for her ignorance may safely be named in the past tense."

"You are a man of society, and ought to know; but my small field of observation has shown me that some women, at least, affect frivolity and simplicity in the presence of company, from which I inferred that society admires that sort of women."

"Perhaps it does, after a fashion," he replied, with a smile. "But depend upon it, Miss Allston, the scepter of belleship was never wrested from an intelligent conversationalist by an ignorant woman, even though the brilliant woman has a much plainer face than the other. People love to be entertained, and one who can offer wit and wisdom, without pedantry is sure to be admired, and, if she can add genuine unselfishness to her list of accomplishments, to be loved also.

"Perhaps," said I. "But have you not forgotten to return to the drawing-room?"

"Thank you for your reminder, Miss Allston; may I venture to hope that this will not be our last meeting?"

"I am, as I told you, a servant, and prefer not to be patronized. We met by accident. If we meet again, I shall not recognize you."

He smiled good-humoredly, bowed, said "We shall see," and turned away.

I felt vexed with myself for having conversed so freely with a stranger, and made sundry good resolutions by which my future deportment was to be governed.

I do not understand what there was in the trifling event just narrated to stir my nature, but that night I did not close my eyes till 3 o'clock. I began to hate myself for having remained so long in a menial position, without a single struggle to rise above it. A beautiful thought came to me at last with the suddenness of inspiration. I had in many instances proven myself to be an excellent nurse for the sick. I had more than once administered simple remedies with success in the absence of a physician. I had been fascinated by the study of anatomy and physiology; why not add to these a knowledge of therapeutics? Why not become a physician, practicing among women and children? The thought was healing oil to my troubled spirits, and I was soon asleep, happily ignorant of the long struggle entailed upon me by my resolution, of the cost of medical courses and the difficulty of persuading patients that a woman can be fit to undertake a "case."

It was wonderful how often Mr. Gleason found it necessary, after that, to come to the pump at the kitchen door for a drink, and how he persisted in not noticing the glass which I placed there for his accommodation, but must always come into the kitchen, no matter how busy I was, and trouble me to get one for him, and pause awhile to talk.

I found out one thing. I could talk, and no one had ever tried to draw me out before.

I was not alarmed when I found that I watched eagerly for his coming. I told myself that no one whose friendship was worth caring for had ever before treated me like a rational being and an equal, and that had this friend been a woman, my love would have been just the same.

We talked on every subject, from the lore of legends to international politics, and I never dreamed that it was more than the pleasure of speaking on subjects remote from puddings and pies that made me care for Mr. Gleason.

I had a terrible awakening. One day he was just leaving me when a voice on the lawn was heard to call out:

"Where's Mr. Gleason?"

"Down in the kitchen, I suppose, courting the cook," was the answer, more suggestive than lady-like.

It was not the heat of the stove that made my face burn at that moment, and the thought flashed into my mind that I had and unquestionable right to be courted, just as Mr. Gleason re-entered the room and said:

"That coarse jest on the lawn has made me resolve to ask you now what I had intended to defer to a later day. I love you, Miss Allston; will you be my wife?"

"Oh, no, no, Mr. Gleason! Where is your honor, to trifle with the affections of Elsie, and then seek to wed me? I am surprised beyond measure. I thought better of you. Go!"

"I cannot tell what you may have heard," he replied, with a pale, stern face, "but I have been no more attentive than courtesy demanded. I had dared to hope for a different answer. You have accused me of dishonor. That parts us."

Then he was gone. The same day he departed from my Aunt Deborah's. "A sudden fancy for sketching among the mountains. Never thinks of anything but his art," complained the guests. The following day Elsie's engagement was announced to the person Aunt Deborah had chosen for her. She could not live without plenty of money, she said.

Six years passed, during the most of which I was not in communication with Aunt Deborah or any of my relatives, they having, with one accord refused to forgive me for being "strong-minded" and persisting in the study of medicine. They were years of hard work and almost unendurable loneliness. I was engaged in professional labors in a village in Vermont.

One day a messenger came in great haste to call me to the bedside of a stranger who was very ill, perhaps dying. No male physician was to be found. Would I go? I hesitated but a single moment. How thankful I was afterward that I obeyed the impulse of mercy, and cast aside that of prudery! It was Mr. Gleason.

When he became conscious, days afterward, he reached feebly for my hand and said:

"This is what I have been praying for. I have found you at last, Hannah."

That was five years ago, and now we have been married just four years and eleven months, and are as happy as mortals, subject to the ague and their neighbors' chickens, can ever hope to be. On our marriage day I threatened to "throw physic to the dogs," but my husband said:

"No. You shall always be my physician."

Hair Oil.

A youngster on Case avenue had noticed a tall black bottle on his father's dressing table, and asked what it was.

"That, my son, is hair oil," answered his father, with a furtive and wandering look, "and it is not at all nice for little boys."

The youthful questioner took a smell of the contents and asked no more information on the subject. He kept up a go-d bit of thinking, however. Last Sunday the family entertained some friends at dinner, and there was plum pudding with brandy sauce. The small boy had found his opportunity. When he was helped to the pudding he sized it up with large eyes.

"Pa," he said, in a loud, shrill tone, as he sniffed the sauce afar off, "the hair oil on this puddin' smells awful good."—Detroit Free Press.

Why He Wanted a Will.

A colored man about sixty years of age blind in one eye and walking with a cane, hobbled up stairs into the office of a Griswold street lawyer yesterday and announced that he desired to make his will.

"Got much property to leave?" asked the lawyer.

"Well, sah, I'ze persessed of a dog, a cook-stove, a wheelbarrow, an' two flatirons dat my fust wife left me."

"And who are you going to leave them to?"

"My darter, Nancy, ober on Indiana street. Ize mar'ied agin, you know, an' I wants to put dat property whar' my present wife can't git it. She doan' git nuffin belongin' to me if I can help it."

"It will cost you five dollars to have a will drawn."

"Shoo! Can't cost dat."

"Yes, it will."

"Den I reckon I'll administrate on my stuff afore I die. Would dat work?"

"Certainly."

"Den I'll run de dog off, lend de wheelbarrow, pocket the flatiron, an' stan' by to rush de cook stove outer de house de fust time de ole woman goes to de grocery. Kin I git a warrant heah?"

"What for?"

"Fur assault an battery. When de ole woman finds what I'ze done she'll walk all ober me, an' I might as well save time by gettin' out de warrant now."

He was directed to the proper place, and he went away saying that it would perhaps be still better to have her arrested and sent up for ninety days in advance.

The Firm Mother.

"Come here to me," said the firm mother to her son. "Didn't I tell you that I'd whip you if you went downtown?"

"Yessum," standing on one foot.

"What made you go? Say!"

"Cause," standing on the other foot.

"Didn't you know I'd whip you?"

"Yessum," showing by his manner that he didn't.

"I'm a great mind to wear you out. If you go outside the yard again to-day I'll whip you."

About ten minutes afterward she sees the boy playing in the street, and calls him. He comes reluctantly.

"Didn't I tell you I'd whip you if you went outside the yard?"

"Yessum."

"Why did you do it?"

"Cause."

"You good for nothing little rascal, I'm a great mind to wear you out. If you go outside this yard again to-day I'll whip you, if it's the last act of my life. Do you hear me!"

"Yessum."

After a while she saw him playing in the street again. Calls him and says:

"Never mind. I'll tell your pa when he comes."—Arkansas Traveller.

Wanted to Know About Switches.

A white-haired, shrill-voiced boy, about eight years old, rode down town with his parents on the Sixth avenue elevated road. He gazed curiously at two or three up trains, which whizzed by the one he was in, and in a voice that sent a thrill through every person in the car, piped out:

"Pa, how do these cars turn around?"

"They don't turn around, my son; when they reach the end of the line they are switched from one track to the other," answered the father, sedately.

"Who switches 'em?" asked the boy, eagerly.

"Why, the engine, to be sure."

"The Indian!" repeated the questioner. "He must be a pretty big Indian isn't he, pa.

"Yes, yes; don't talk so loud," said the father, curtly.

"Ma," queried the boy, after a moment's pause, "does he switch 'em the same as you and pa switches me, when I don't do right?"

The maternal relative reached for the boy, wiped his nose, pulled his cloth cap down over his eyes, and told him to keep quiet.—New York Times.

They Sold Him a Hole.

He was telling the story in the billiard room of a Denver hotel. Said he: "There were three of us, you see, and Nevada was a cold climate for us. We were dead broke, half starved, and clear discouraged, when along came a New Yorker. He wouldn't play cards, wouldn't be robbed, and we couldn't stick him with forged land patents or bogus pre-emptions. One day we trailed out and dug a hole into a hill and salted it a bit, and rushed back and offered the New Yorker the big discovery for $3,000 cash down.

"And he bit?"

"Took right hold like a pair of pincers. Why, he never stopped even to beat us down. We got a cool thousand apiece and made for 'Frisco."

"Purty cool that was."

"Well, I dunno. If there was anything cool in that transaction it was the way that New Yorker hunted up a pard, set miners to work, bought machinery, and took over $750,000 out of that 'ar hole inside of eight months. Maybe we've got over feeling flat, but I guess not."—Wall Street News.

Pack your cares in as small compass as you can, so that you can carry them yourself and not let them annoy others.

Self-Dependence.

If you would be anything, or do anything in this world, begin at once, and' don't wait for somebody to come along and give you a lift. There are thousands of young people to-day waiting for some venerable friend to shuffle off this mortal coil and leave them a few thousands. Then, say they, there will be some use in trying, and they will shortly double or treble the sum, and a fortune will result. But the young men and women who have the courage to start at once on their life-work and leave future difficulties to be overcome as they appear, are those for whom the world waits, to solve its problems and develop its resources. But these are all too seldom found. The majority are found waiting for help at every turn; and to' father, mother, brother, sister, or the successful friend who has had the courage to grapple with adverse circumstances and conquer them, he appeals again and again for aid, and they give it. But there is little or no improvement in his condition; and the very aid that should have given him a footing from which to advance, has left him instead weaker and more dependent, from the very fact that he feels that when he fails, others will make his loss to him, and he fails to make the effort he would if he had only himself between him and want.

One primary need in every character that would develop a sturdy manhood or womanhood is the ability to decide for self any and all questions; for where this quality is wanting, the individual invariably asks some other one's opinion, and if he acts on this one's judgment now, and again on some other one's, there will be apparent in his life a strange inconsistency of behavior, that will mystify friends and repel acquaintances, and destroy all personal influence.

Now, this quality of self-reliance, although to some extent a natural endowment, must be cultivated. This many parents prevent, by preparing everything to the hand of their children, so that no effort on their part is required to realize their wishes. And, as a rule, children of such parents are not the men and women that become famous. It is the rare exception that a youth reared in luxury and ease ever rises above mediocre in anything. On the other hand, it is the sons and daughters of humble cottagers, who from very infancy have been thrown upon their own resources, first for amusement, as they lay in the cradle while the mother toiled, and later to improvise playthings for themselves if they would have any, those are the characters who, having learned thus early this very important lesson, have developed into the self-made men and women that have blessed the world.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Doing Things Well.

"There!" said Harry, throwing down the shoe-brush: "there! that'll do. My shoes don't look very bright, but no matter. Who cares?"

"Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well," said his father, who had heard the boy's careless speech.

"My boy, your shoes look wretchedly. Pick up the brush and make them shine; when you have finished come into the house."

As soon as Harry appeared with his well-polished shoes his father said:

"I have a little story to tell you. I once knew a poor boy whose mother taught him the proverb which I repeated to you a few minutes ago. This boy went out to service in a gentleman's family, and he took pains to do everything well, no matter how unimportant it seemed. His employer was pleased, and he took him into his shop. He did his work well there, and when sent on errands he went quickly, and was soon back in his place. So he advanced from step to step until he became clerk, and then a partner in the business. He is now a rich man, and anxious that his son, Harry, should learn to practice the rule which made him prosper."

"Why, papa, were you a poor boy once?" asked Harry.

"Yes, my son—so poor that I had to go out to service, and black boots, and wait on table, and do any menial service which was required of me. By doing little things well, I was soon trusted with more important ones."—Young Reaper.

Enterprise in Dakota.

The following good story, which illustrates the rapidity with which towns are built up in new territories, was told the Northwestern Lumbermen by a gentleman who was looking around in Dakota recently. He was present when officials of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road arrived at a point thirty miles North of Mitchell, and planted a town which they called Woonsocket. At the time only one farm-house was standing in the vicinity, and a car was used as a depot. This was on Thursday, and on Saturday of the same week there were twenty shanties, a livery stable, two stores, a saloon, a hotel and three lumber yards. There are men who have loaded lumber on cars without knowing where it would be unloaded, and then run it to the first new town they hear of being started. But it is not best to imagine that all of the yards which are established so suddenly in the new Dakota towns have complete assortments, or are models of neatness. A few hundred feet of lumber thrown down by the track constitutes a yard, which grows and is put into shape, as the town progresses.—Cape Ann Advertiser.

Installation at Wollaston.

On Monday evening last, Wollaston Lodge, No. 926, Knights of Honor, entertained its friends by a public installation of the officers elect and a concert at Wollaston Hall. It was the first public affair of the kind that the lodge has held, and was very interesting and enjoyable to the many present. Several of the officers of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts honored the occasion by their presence, among them being the Grand Dictator, W. W. Woodbury. The officers elect were those published in last week's PATRIOT, and the installing officer was the D. D. G. D., H. O. Fairbanks of Wollaston, and he performed his work smoothly and well.

The Dictator, E. E. Williamson, on assuming his position, extended a hearty welcome to those present, and then introduced the Grand Dictator, who, in a somewhat extended speech reviewed the works, usefulness and standing of the fraternity, and was very strong in claiming for the Knights of Honor a position second to no other order. In the United States there are now about 130,000 members, and the order boast of relieving more families with one assessment, than any other kindred organization, the last assessment paying seventy-one death benefits. How a dollar assessment on 130,000 members can pay seventy-one benefits of $2,000 each, and help to pay the running expenses of the order, we are at a loss to know. While we give the Knights of Honor a high place in benevolent societies, let us say by way of friendly criticism, we do not think it has any more of a claim to being the best, than the Odd Fellows, Royal Arcanum, Legion of Honor or some other organizations.

The concert that followed the installation was very fine, the following artists taking part:—Miss C. S. Warner, soprano; S. M. King and H. O. Fairbanks, tenors; G. W. Richardson, basso; W. C. Pierce, baritone and humorist, and Mrs. W. C. Pierce, pianist. The selections by Miss Warner and Mr. King were splendidly rendered, receiving loud encores, while the humorous selections by Mr. Pierce kept the house in a continuous uproar, especially so, that of "The Old Maid." It was an enjoyable entertainment, and the evening will long be remembered by the friends of the Knights of Honor.

BEAUTIFUL STORE. The most convenient and beautiful store ever built in this town is the one which Mr. G. Frederick Wilson has just completed for his own use, adjoining his fine residence on Hancock street. The arrangements of the whole building are perfect in all particulars, and for convenience cannot be surpassed. The store, which occupies the first floor, has all the modern appliances, and is fitted up in a very handsome manner with drawers for spices and such like articles, while boxes with sliding covers are ranged on one side of the building, thus keeping sugars, teas, coffees, &c., all under cover, where they are free from dust.

The meat room has everything for convenience that the great trade done by Mr. Wilson demands. The refrigerator is large, and the ice will be packed on top of it, where the meats will be kept cool and dry. An elevator will be used to convey goods to the cellar or to the store-room over the market-room. A large dry and convenient cellar can be used for storing vegetables, &c. Mr. Wilson has worked hard all of his life, and we are pleased to see his labors rewarded with prosperity, and may success attend him in his new store.

CALENDARS. With the new year comes the useful and oftentimes handsome calendars. We have been made the recipient of some of them. The Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company have a very pretty one. The months are blocked and mounted on a colored card, representing a beach scene in the distance, while in the foreground a lady is setting under the shade of a parasol; it is beautifully colored and very neat looking. Charles H. Porter, agent for the North British Mercantile left us a very pretty one; E. P. Howland, agent for the American Fire Insurance Co., has also given us a very neat but plain one. J. H. Osgood & Co. of Boston, have gotten up a plain simple calendar which will be greatly appreciated by the business man. The calendar issued by T. C. Evans, of Boston, is blocked on a colored card, with a very artistic design in which "Father Time" is quite a prominent character. The Dorchester Insurance Co. have sent us a very neat calendar, the months are blocked on a very handsome card representing the sweet face of a little girl in bright costume. The smallest calendar we have yet seen was one which A. S. Jordan, & Co., agent for the Phœnix Assurance Co., sent us.

ODD FELLOWS. The formation of the new lodge of Odd Fellows is meeting with good success. Twenty or more Odd Fellows now residing in Quincy have signed their names to a petition asking for a return of the charter originally held in town, the lodge being known as the Mount Wollaston.

Yesterday this petition, together with a large list of names of persons desirous of joining the order, was carried to the secretary of the Grand Lodge. This body meets the first Thursday in February, and as there is no doubt but what the petition will be granted it is expected that in two weeks from that time the lodge will be in running order. A preliminary meeting of the charter members is to be held this evening.

A WET CELLAR. The Water Company has not commenced to supply our citizens with water, as yet, still on Wednesday morning last Mr. N. B. Furnald found that he had more than he had ordered,—the water was from four to five feet deep in his cellar. It seems that a trench had been dug from the street to his residence, for a water-pipe, and filled up loosely. Some of the surface water occasioned by the heavy rain, found an opening through the trench to his cellar, and the result was a nice duck pond the next morning.

☞ Mr. and Mrs. E. W. H. Bass celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their marriage last Tuesday evening by entertaining a few of their relatives and friends at their residence on Granite street. A very pleasent time was enjoyed by all, and they were the recipients of two large alligators and a great many good wishes for their future welfare.

☞ A number of young people from this town attended the Leap Year party under the auspices of the Braintree Cadets, at the Braintree Town Hall, last evening.

☞ Mr. William H. Glennon, of West Quincy, has invented a new kind of roller skate, which he thinks can be used very successfully on the street.

☞ The frame of a new house being built by Samuel D. Ramsdell on Depot street, Atlantic, for Mr. John Golden, blew down in the gale on Wednesday morning.

☞ A reunion of the Spear family is to be held on Tuesday evening next, at Faxon Hall. These meetings like the picnics of this family are largely attended and greatly enjoyed.

☞ The grand Leap Year party which has been looked forward to with a great deal of pleasure by the young people connected with the Unitarian Church, will take place at Faxon Hall next Friday evening.

☞ Yesterday afternoon, there was a slight fire at the residence of James Sullivan, near the granite quarry of Messrs. Field & Wild. An alarm was given, but the flames were extinguished without the aid of the fire department.

☞ Mr. Charles H. Spear was plowing his ice on Thursday, preparatory to getting it in. It was about a foot thick and of good quality. The rain yesterday put a stop to his labors, and he will probably be obliged to wait a few days.

☞ One of the heaviest rains that has visited this vicinity for many months fell on Tuesday night; over two inches on the level. It carried off a large quantity of snow; still the ground is pretty well covered at the present time.

☞ About six acres of land on the corner of Granite and Water streets were sold at auction on the fourth instant by order of the administratrix of the estate of William H. Jones. Mr. William Williams was the purchaser at $3,005.

☞ The annual reunion of the F. F. F's at Faxon Hall on Wednesday evening was an enjoyable time, but unfortunately for the association was but slimly attended; being a very much smaller party than on previous years. Porter's orchestra furnished excellent music.

☞ Some wells that have been dry for many months are now supplied with water. The heavy rain this week will be appreciated by many. The well at Mr. Joseph W. Dennen's residence, which has not discounted for many months is now meeting all demands promptly.

☞ A meeting of young gentlemen interested in the formation of a gymnasium was held in the skating rink Thursday evening last. Mr. J. F. Pierce was elected Chairman. Committees were chosen to ascertain the actual expenses, and will report at the next meeting, Thursday, Jan. 17th.

☞ The play of Rob Roy McGregor is to be represented soon in Quincy under unusually favorable circumstances. Some members of Clan McGregor, under the auspices of the clan in this town, have long been preparing themselves to fitly perform this play. As they are Scotchmen they will put into it the proper spirit. Their rehearsals promise an excellent performance.

☞ The supper and entertainment at the Universalist vestry last Wednesday evening were well attended. In the enforced absence of the cornet player our capable pianist Mr. A. T. Jackson ably introduced the programme with a solo. It was a treat to listen to the sweet and cultivated voices of Mr. and Miss Peck, assisted by the sympathetic accompaniment of Miss Montgomery. Mr. Monroe recited several original selections and responded to repeated encores, adding greatly to the delight of the evening. May we soon hear all again.

GRANITE BANK. At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the National Granite Bank held on Tuesday last, the following-named gentlemen were elected directors for the ensuing year:—Charles Marsh, James Torrey, Charles R. Mitchell, William G. Sheen, T. King, Jr., Thomas A. Whicher, Edwin W. Marsh and R. F. Claflin.

At a subsequent meeting held by the Directors, Hon. Charles Marsh was chosen president of the board.

ARRIVED. A large three-masted schooner, with about four hundred thousand feet of cypress lumber for the A. T. Stearns Company, was successfully towed up through the ice to their wharf on Neponset River, on Thursday morning last.

CHURCHES.

The week of prayer has been observed by both churches in this place. At the Baptist Church a prayer meeting has been held on each evening and Monday afternoon. Rev. Mr. Higgins has had charge, and the meetings have been very well attended.

At the Congregational Church services have been held every evening excepting Wednesday, when a parish meeting was deemed necessary. The programme arranged by the alliance was not strictly adhered to,—Monday evening's subject being the promises of God; Tuesday's,—humiliation and confession; Thursday's—Prayer for the Sunday School; Friday's,—prayer for baptism of the Holy Ghost. The meetings have had about a usual attendance, with the exception of Thursday, when an especially interesting service was held.

On Wednesday evening the Ladies' Church Fund Association held a meeting in the vestry and transacted business of importance. It was voted to have a jug breaking on Wednesday next, at which will be provided a supper, and possibly some further entertainment. Admission fee, ten cents.

The term "jug breaking" may sound slightly intemperate, and possibly our townsman, Mr. H. H. Faxon, on hearing of the entertainment, may think he has not done his full duty by the Point; but the matter is no more serious than this:—Some five months ago, thirty ladies volunteered to each take a jug and see how much might be got in small contributions from their friends, the money to be added to the building fund of the church. Mr. Fred H. Smith will be jug breaker, and Mr. George A. Sidelinger will count the contents.

This is the first of a series of pleasant entertainments the association is planning to bring before the public, and the fact of having so convenient and comfortable a place for holding the same, as the new vestry, it is supposed that they will be well attended, and all thus aid in the good work of canceling the debt incurred by the church in remodelling its building.

VULTURE 4.

The Vulture Engine Company held its regular monthly meeting on Monday evening. It was voted to hold a ball on the 24th instant in the Town Hall, which being much larger than Faxon Hall, where their assemblies have been held, will probably accommodate all who wish to attend. Also voted that the proceeds be given to the charitable society in the place, which will be aiding a good cause.

It is rumored that amongst this excellent company sufficient talent is manifest to favor forming a glee club or a minstrel troupe. Rehearsals are now being held, and soon a fine entertainment will be announced.

SHIPPING.

Mr. Alfred Sampson's family have gone to Sharon for the winter.

Mrs. S. B. Brown and son have returned from Chelsea, where they have spent the past few weeks.

District Court, Quincy.

The following criminal cases have been before the District Court this week:—

Bartholemew Farrell, of Weymouth, for a fourth drunk. Case continued for two months.

John and Mary Upton, of Weymouth, for keeping a liquor nuisance. They were each fined $50 and costs, and ordered to the House of Correction for three months. They appealed.

Thomas Morgan for vagrancy. Sent to the House of Correction for three months.

John Collins for a like offence was sent for five months.

District Police Edwin Thomas arrested on Saturday night last Elmer Pshaw, Patrick Heffernan and Fred. Brown, all of Taunton, for larceny from the shoe shop of David S. Murray of South Weymouth, on the night of the 24th of February, 1882. They were arraigned and held in $800 bonds for their appearance on Wednesday morning next.

☞ A wealthy young man of Natick, Mass., while much the worse for drink, hired a horse. He fell asleep in the vehicle while the stablers were harnessing the horse, and they let him sleep in the stable. When he awoke, he said he had used the quadruped well and fed him at Newton Lower Falls. He paid $3 for his drive, and went off satisfied.

☞ An old house, once known as the Anchor Tavern, in which Lafayette slept when he was in Hingham, is still standing, and an avenue which has recently been laid out, across an adjoining estate is now named "Lafayette," in remembrance of the General's stay at the house near by.

☞ M. M. Ballou, who has been stopping at the Tremont House, Boston, since his return from a trip around the world, has paid that hotel $70,000 for board. He has made that house his home for many years, including all the time that he was running the St. James Hotel.—Roxbury Journal.

RECEIPTS. The total receipts of the government during the first half of the fiscal year that ended with December 31, 1883, amounted to $178,344,207, as against $200,801,187 for the corresponding period of last year, which is a falling off of $28,456,000.

ASTOR FAMILY. As a proof of the great wealth of the Astor family in New York, it may be stated that their taxes this year amounted to over $400,000. This does not represent their entire taxable wealth, as at least $100,000 of taxes are paid by lessees of their buildings.

RESIGNATION. Hon. Asa French, of Braintree, who has served long and faithfully on the commission of inland fisheries, has sent his resignation to the Governor.

West Quincy Items.

A sociable for the children was given in the vestry of the M. E. Church on New Year's night. A large number were present, and singing, speaking, etc., was on the programme. Ice cream and cake was served, and a general good time was the order of the evening.

Messrs. Eaton Bros. will commence filling their ice houses next week. The portable engine from Badger Bros.' will be used for conveying the ice to the buildings. A large number of men have been employed to carry on the enterprise.

Quite an interest has been manifest by the young gentlemen of West Quincy in the new lodge of Odd Fellows that is soon to be started. About twenty-five have signed on the charter list from here, and there are several others that will send in their names after the lodge has been organized.

Wednesday evening a large number of the friends of Mr. Charles F. Badger gave him a surprise at his residence on Cemetery street. The evening was pleasantly passed with games, and a fine collation was also served.

A new bell has been placed on the office of Miller & Luce, and will be used to denote the time for working hours at their place of business.

Mr. F. J. Fuller, Mr. H. S. Luce and several other of our prominent stone dealers, are away for the present, passing much of their time in New York and the West.

The regular meetings of the "Apollo Club" will be held as usual, at the School house, Thursday evening.

A Sunday school concert will be held in the M. E. Church, next Sunday evening. A.

South Quincy.

We are pleased to note the growth and business prosperity which pervades the southern section of our town. Within a short space of time many new tenement houses have been erected, and also a number of stone sheds. The one erected by Mr. William C. Townsend is a model one, and the workmen certainly appreciate their comfortable quarters. The Quailey Bros. have also started a new shed and are doing quite a business. These recent additions to those already established in the business in this vicinity gives this portion of our town a very enterprising outlook.

The increase in the stone business has added greatly to the business of the Old Colony Railroad; some eight hundred dollars or more a month. The company have been obliged to build a side track to accommodate the water works, and it is understood that they intend to add more sidings to the stone sheds the coming spring.

At the Mitchell granite works the sheds have been enlarged and the workmen now enjoy working in warm comfortable quarters.

Messrs. Cook & McDonnell have also enlarged and improved their sheds.

Mr. Grant, the depot master at the Quincy Adams station, is a man well qualified for the position, and the increase in business keeps him busy most of the time. SAM.

State Legislature.

The Massachusetts Legislature is now fairly underway. The various committees in the Senate and House have been appointed. We notice that the Senator and Representatives from Quincy are on important committees:

Hon. William A. Hodges on public health, charitable institutions and manufacturers.

William G. A. Pattee, Esq., on the judiciary.

William N. Eaton, Esq., on prisons.

Numerous petitions have been presented; among the number we notice: one from John C. Randall and others for an act of incorporation for the purpose of constructing a system of sewerage in the town of Quincy; one from N. E. Hollis and others for an act of incorporation for the purpose of supplying the town of Braintree with water for domestic and other purposes; one from Mr. Norris for authority for the Old Colony Railroad to purchase land for a second track between South Braintree and Middleboro', and between South Braintree and Somerset Junction in Fall River by way of Taunton, and between Weir Junction and the junction with the Middleboro' track.

INSTALLATION. On Monday last a new organization known as the Sons of Veterans held a very social and pleasant meeting at the G. A. R. Hall on Hancock street, Quincy, and the following officers were installed by Capt. C. E. Lewis, of Lynn, a member of the National Division:—

Captain—L. Herbert Nott.
First Lieutenant—Geo. W. Prouty.
Second Lieutenant—Elmer E. Munroe.
Chaplain—Henry E. Rich.
Sergeant-of-guard—Joseph Kelley.
Orderly Sergeant—Edson Loud.
Quartermaster Sergeant—George S. Bent.
Surgeon—Storer T. Flint.
Color Bearers—L. Albert Parrott and Walter Warren.
Trustees—Charles Merrill, Amaziah Linscott and Dennis Carney.

After the installation services short and interesting speeches were made by Capt. Lewis of Lynn, Commander William P. Martin and other members of Paul Revere Post, Capt. Nott and officers of the Sons of Veterans and others.

This new organization is composed entirely of sons of the grand army who served in the Rebellion. It is to be an auxiliary to Paul Revere Post, whom it will aid and assist whenever it can. The young organization was encouraged by some of the old veterans present who offered pecuniary assistance in starting the camp if it should be needed.

After the speeches all were invited to partake of a bountiful collation, which was much enjoyed.

A very handsome cake was presented to Capt. Lewis, which he took with him to Lynn.

OBITUARY. Mr. John Long, a prominent citizen of Randolph, widely-known in Southeastern Massachusetts, died Wednesday forenoon, at the age of 70 years, after an illness of just one week. He was proprietor of the large livery stable connected with the Howard House at Randolph for nearly thirty years, in which business, assisted by judicious investments in real estate in the centre of the town, he accumulated a competency and retired from active business twelve years ago. He was bu... for seven years, from deputy sheriff ... year which office he resigned about ... ago.

Odd Fellows.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

Will you please allow me space in your valuable paper for a few words in favor of the Order of Odd Fellowship, which I trust is soon to be started in Quincy; as there are a great many that are desirous of joining the Order, and do not fully understand its antiquity; and judging that a word in its favor would be of some help in that direction.

As I understand it, the origin of the "Independent Order of Odd Fellows" is doubtful and obscure. It took its present form in England during the last century, was transplanted to America, and the first lodge was formed at Baltimore, in the year 1819.

However much may be said in favor of the great antiquity of the Order, and however plausible the argument, intelligent Odd Fellows are willing to yield this point entirely to the captious, and to rest upon the broad basis of the sacred principles of faith, hope and charity, friendship, love and truth,—whose claim to an antiquity coeval with humanity itself, none can deny.

As a social institution Odd Fellowship inculcates kindness of treatment, gentleness of bearing, and disinterestedness of conduct, such as gives to a well ordered family its greatest charm. Though we do not as Odd Fellows admit religious and political disputes, to every man, as a Christian and a citizen is left free to obey the dictates of his own conscience; his religion is a personal matter between himself and his Creator.

As members of the great family, we feel a deep interest in the well-being of each other, and are bound by lawful means to promote the same. If a brother is in need of our counsel, he lays open the secrets of his breast to us in full confidence that we shall keep sacred the trust; and such advice and caution as we can give he at once receives. Has poverty laid her chilling hand upon him, he comes to us with the full assurance that he will not be sent away empty; has sickness and disease laid him on a bed of pain, though every other earthly friend may have forsaken him, he has a brotherhood which will stand by him to the last; day by day they minister to his wants, and night by night, with untiring love, they watch by his couch, and, if human aid cannot save, they smooth his troubled pillow, receive his dying injunctions, and see him close his eyes in his final slumber.

But brotherly affection stops not here, and though the world may stand aloof from the unknowing dead, he goes not down to a grave unhonored and unwept for. A weekly allowance from the Lodge funds is made to sick brothers, which he receives not as charity from his brethren, but as his right, which the proudest need not blush to apply to the relief of his necessities.

In your next issue I will endeavor to inform your readers why we hold weekly meetings and have secrets connected with the Order.

I remain very respectfully yours,
JAMES H. BELL.

The License Vote.

The returns made to the Secretary of the Commonwealth of the votes cast on the question of licensing the sales of intoxicating liquors, and the amounts received from the issue of such licenses, are complete for the year 1883. The figures showing the vote indicate that nearly half of those who go to the polls ignore the license question, and that a full expression of the people of the State on this subject has never been had. In twenty-seven of the towns which cast the largest town votes upon it, the results were these:

| | YES. | NO. |
|---|---|---|
| Clinton | 537 | 506 |
| Milford | 600 | 321 |
| Dedham | 368 | 261 |
| Hyde Park | 279 | 518 |
| Quincy | 458 | 1,686 |
| Randolph | 314 | 395 |
| Weymouth | 242 | 499 |
| Wakefield | 363 | 391 |
| Waltham | 951 | 818 |
| Watertown | 354 | 279 |
| Woburn | 899 | 589 |
| Framingham | 373 | 339 |
| Hopkinton | 333 | 379 |
| Marlboro' | 486 | 518 |
| Medford | 351 | 256 |
| Natick | 812 | 603 |
| Chicopee | 467 | 530 |
| Westfield | 605 | 246 |
| Greenfield | 406 | 306 |
| Beverly | 225 | 376 |
| Danvers | 400 | 438 |
| Marblehead | 588 | 239 |
| Peabody | 585 | 348 |
| Great Barrington | 355 | 235 |
| Lee | 249 | 307 |
| North Adams | 722 | 271 |
| Pittsfield | 784 | 351 |

It will be noticed that Quincy cast the largest No vote of any town in the state. The reason for this immense vote is largely due, no doubt, to the indefatigable labors and money of our townsman, Henry H. Faxon, Esq. He has probably done more temperance work in Quincy than any dozen men have done in any other town in the state.

C. P. HUNTINGTON. This railway magnate of the Pacific coast, who controls the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific roads, controls altogether more than 12,000 miles of railroad and water transportation route, and these enormous lines are operated under his direction and in his interest. His great feat is described as being about to take freight from Boston and New York by steamer to Galveston, and thence by railway to San Francisco, beating the transcontinental freight lines by at least a week, or fourteen days against twenty-four. In a few months, the completion of his new lines east of the Mississippi River will give him control of a complete transcontinental line of railway, the ocean termini being Newport News on the Atlantic and San Francisco on the Pacific. He is reported to be worth about fifty millions.

☞ To accommodate a man who was in a hurry, an engine was run over the Boston & Maine railroad from Boston to Portland a short time ago in two hours and a half. This was probably the quickest time ever made between the two cities.

TO BE EXCHANGED. The Postmaster-General has instructed postmasters to exchange, upon application, three and six cent stamps and stamped envelopes issued since 1861, for those of other denominations at their face value. Stamped envelopes bearing printed cards and special requests are to be exchanged; also stamped envelopes that bear printed addresses.

☞ The Carlton, at Jacksonville, Fla., is called the "Brides' Hotel," on account of the numbers of bridal parties that register there. All new arrivals are closely scrutinized by the other guests, which is sometimes rather trying to ... bashful people.

For the Patriot.

A Strike for Freedom.

The twenty-first birthday of Mr. Hugh Owens was very pleasantly celebrated on Monday evening at his residence. About fifty ladies and gentlemen were present, and all enjoyed the festivities of the evening, which consisted of games, dancing, &c. A splendid collation was served. Mr. Owens was presented with an elegant watch chain and charm from his friends. Also a fine gold ring from his mother, and from others a pair of sleeve buttons and a mustache cup,—the latter we presume may be very useful, and was at least quite suggestive. The party seperated at a late hour with good wishes that many birthdays be added to his life, and that all may prove as pleasant as the one last passed. C.

For the Patriot.

In Memoriam.

Of Walter P. Brackett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph G. Brackett, of Quincy, Mass., who died in Seatle, Washington Territory:—

Far from his home he breathed his last,
'Neath chill North-western skies;
At noon of life his journey o'er,
In death's calm sleep he lies.

His kindness made the strangers friends,
Who gathered round his bed
And cheered him with their tender care,
And wept when he was dead.

Near to the wide Pacific sea,
Whose shores its waters lave,
'Twas there he toiled with busy hands,
And there he found his grave.

Fearless, he sailed for many years
O'er stormy oceans broad,
Through varied scenes, in distant lands,
He with deep pleasure trod.

And when rebellious war was heard
Resounding through our land,
He seized his musket and his sword,
And joined the patriot band.

With heroes on the field he struck
For Union and the right;
As the great cause espoused was just,
They conquered in the fight.

The honor of a nation free
He shared with all the brave,
Who for our country's flag and fame
Their lives and fortunes gave.

On land and sea and tented field,
His duties nobly done,
A good name earned by faithful work,
Life's victory now is won.

May He who rules the world in love
His aged parents bless,
And prove to all who mourn his loss
A refuge in distress.

God grant that we may meet again
The dear ones gone before,
When we shall cross the stream of death,
And reach that shining shore.

New York, Jan., 1884. J. G. B. H.

A DESERTED VILLAGE. In the very heart of the Adirondack wilderness is located what is known as "the deserted village." Fifty years ago, 90,000 acres of land were purchased by a man named Henderson, and other capitalists, a St. Francis Indian having disclosed to the party that the region was rich in ore. A blast-furnace, a forge, a saw-mill tenement houses, a store, a school-house and a bank were erected, and hundreds of thousands of dollars expended in cutting roads and other improvements. Operations were carried on for twenty-four years. In 1845 Henderson was accidentally shot dead, and five years later business was suddenly suspended. The ponderous water-wheel and the machinery are just where they stopped thirty-three years ago. Wheel-barrows and tools lie around as though operations had been discontinued only yesterday. The village is now the headquarters of a New York sporting club, and the greater part of the year Myron Buttles, agent of the club, and his family, are the only inhabitants of this once busy spot.

The following appointments have also been made:—Town and jail physician, Dr. J. W. Chase; chaplain of the jail and house of correction, Rev. C. B. Smith; janitor of the Court House, A. E. Daniels.

THE FORGER. E. D. Winslow, the reverend Boston forger of eight or nine years ago, is flourishing at Buenos Ayres, under the name of W. D. Low. Stanley, the African explorer, expresses his increasing surprise at the vast density of the population in the equatorial portions of the Congo basin, and says if what he has seen may be taken as representing the state of things generally, there is a population in this river basin of 49,000,000.

CARELESSNESS. A year ago 97,000 Christmas presents and 6,000 Christmas cards had to go to the Dead Letter Office, mainly because of the carelessness of the senders. The cards were sent to the Washington hospitals, and the presents are to be sold at auction.

☞ A crematory association has been formed in Washington, and Congress is to be asked to give it a charter. A German physician has given a lot on which to erect a crematory similar to that in Washington, Penn. One of its members says that the expense of burning a body will not be more than $35, and that soon they may be able to reduce it to $20.

LEAP YEAR. Girls, this is Leap Year; it will be four years before another will come, and several days of this one have already passed away. "Procrastination is the thief of time." "Do not put off until to-morrow what may be done to day." "Take time by the forelock."

NO CURE. NO PAY! Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam, when once used, takes the place of all others. See our advertising columns. Nov. 10.—1y

Skating in Central Paik.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8, 1884.

DEAR EDITOR:—Although the extremely cold weather of the past few days may not have been such remarkable weather as was that remembered and related by those oldest residents, whose recollections date back into the unit years of the century, when, as they delight in telling us, New York Bay would freeze over so that men once walked it has, nevertheless, been cold enough to make modern Gothamites blink, sneeze and muffle up as they are not wont to do in these milder later years.

"Where ships now at anchor ride,"

This unusual severity of winter is not pleasant to think of when one realizes the train of suffering and distress it brings to the poor in our city, many of whom hide their misfortunes beyond the reach of pity or relief; but still it has its pleasant aspects, for it came freighted with glad hope to thousands of the eager boys and girls, whose hearts are made glad, when at length they see its realization as the red disc is raised in the park, and the street cars fling out the red flags announcing that the ice is safe and the Park lake is open to the skaters.

Of late years the opportunity for skating here comes so seldom and is of so short duration, that when it does come it is greedily availed of by the participants, and no sooner is the signal so eagerly waited for during cold spells displayed, than thousands flock to the Park, to enter into the sport.

Yesterday for the first time this year the disc appeared, and all day long the lake was covered with persons of all ages and conditions. There were schoolboys and girls, some coming early before school hours, and, unable to resist the temptation, many played truant to get the fullest benefit of the sport; and with their books and slates strapped to their persons, they stayed till night—men and women, so many one would think it a holiday; mothers and nurses, with children and babies, muffled up to the noses, but all in the fullest enjoyment of the invigorating sport; but it was not till after the dismission of the schools that the carnival was at its fullest pitch, and then there was a jam, the number of skaters and the flow of their animal spirits increasing as the hours fled. In the evening the crowd was still further swelled by clerks and shop girls, coming full of frolic, like untamed colts let loose; and young men and maidens, in pairs of sweethearts, each the other's care and solicitude; and older persons, not a few of whose gray heads told of coming age; and it was pleasant to see them there—people from whose hearts the rough friction of care and anxiety had not rubbed all the zest of life or the power to enter into the sports and pastimes of youth.

Many interesting and sometimes comical episodes met the eye of the beholder, as, for instance, when some slight miscalculation of distance or speed on the part of an inexperienced skater would precipitate a collision, which would set a bevy of girls to skeltering, their frightened screams bringing to their rescue a host of young gallants, each trying to outdo the others in their attentions; or when some bashful learner, just picking up confidence, and beginning to congratulate himself upon his progress, would by some undiscoverable cause, suddenly bend up like a half-opened jackknife, his legs up and head down, in painful contact with the ice, the center and unspared object of the mirthful attention of any group of merciless girls who might have witnessed his ungraceful collapse.

Standing at a point above the Terrace, and looking down, one might view a magnificent scene. Below lay the frozen lake, animated by thousands of youths and maidens, their merry, excited voices keeping a fitting accompaniment to the graceful action of their bodies. The glare of the calcium lights transforming the ice into the resemblance of silver, and making the skurry of ice chips raised by the skaters' heels glisten like a shower of diamonds. This picture of light and life was set off in the soberer frame of the shore, bordered by dark evergreens and black leafless shrubbery, standing out in a groundwork of snow, and revealing, yet softening the landscape which stretched away in patches of dark and white to the northern end of the park. On one hand rose the gray turrets of the Belvedere; on the other the apex of Cleopatra's Needle might be seen peeping above the tree-tops,—and the whole scene lighted up by the moon's soft radiance,—made a picture not often to be seen, and never to be forgotten. This was only last evening, and yet, to-night, as I write, a fierce rainstorm is raging, the lake is spoiled for skaters, the lights are out, the park deserted, and wet wind howling among the naked trees,—where last evening reigned a scene of such brilliancy and life, all is now desolate and dreary as some remote wilderness. F. R. L.

A ROYAL VISITOR. The Prince of Pless, who, except his valet, was the only saloon passenger on the Cunard steamship Tamaria, which arrived in Boston on Tuesday of last week, is making a tour of the world, and has visited every country except the United States. His family reigns over the town of Pless, a place of some 4000 inhabitants, situated in Prussian Silesia, noted for its leather, oil-cloth and woolen manufactures.

PERSONNEL OF THE HOUSE. In the present House there are 40 ex-Confederates, while 66 members served in the Union army. There are 188 lawyers, 15 journalists, 14 manufacturers, 11 merchants, 10 farmers, 2 lumbermen and doctors, 8 bankers, a ticket agent, druggist, engineer, hatter, railroad president, miner, geologist, shoemaker and clergyman.

FURNITURE. The next time you visit Boston, do not fail to spend a few hours at Paine's Ware-rooms and Manufactory, on Canal street, opposite the Boston and Maine Depot. They do an immense business in all kinds of Furniture, Draperies, Curtains and Lambrequins. Doing a strict cash business, they take no risk, and sell their goods at prices much under the market. They own the largest building for furniture manufacturing in the city, and employ first-class men in all the departments. The salerooms are 150 feet by 50 feet; lighted by electricity all day, and connected by steam elevators. The manufacturing department is in the same building, so that customers can see just how they make and finish their work. Numerous visitors are coming and going all the time.

☞ SOLOMON WHEELER of Chicago has given a tract of land in the western part of that city and $200,000 to erect upon it an Episcopal Church and preparatory school, modeled after Oxford.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8, 1884.

Congress has re-assembled, and the real work of the session has begun. Many members returned to the city last week while others half frozen arrived yesterday and to-day. Some members who are fresh from their constituents claim to have received enlightenment direct from the people on the looming question; but when they explain, it appears that they have only received a confirmation of their previous views. Republicans are representing that Democratic members have returned in a discordant and despondent frame of mind. They insist that trouble is brewing in the Democratic family because of the antagonism of interests in the two great committees of the House; the one headed by Mr. Morrison, and the other by Mr. Randall. The former wants a long season, with tariff legislation; the latter, they say, wants a short session, without tariff legislation.

Chairman Randall has already inaugurated economy in the Committee of Appropriations. His sub-committee on pensions has decided that $15,000,000 in addition to the unexpended balance will be ample appropriation for the pensions this year. This will give between seventy and eighty millions of dollars, figures that reach what the Secretary of the Treasury also thinks will be sufficient. Mr. Randall says the committees will do nothing to delay the payment of pensions, but thinks money should be appropriated on a basis of what is necessary for the year, and not on the plan of piling up millions to the credit of the bureau. When Commissioner Dabler asked for and obtained one hundred millions of dollars, he estimated for a large surplus that reached thirty-nine millions.

Mr. Randall's distribution of work among his committee men is significant of strict economy. The suspicious committees are zealously guarded. The chairman stations himself before the Sundry Civil and Deficiency bills, and puts Mr. Holman in charge of the legislative bill. Mr. Randall also puts himself on the sub-committee on the Navy, and as he absolutely opposes any appropriation for new ships, the Navy Department knows what to expect. Mr. Keifer is reduced to a minimum, being put in charge simply of the Military Academy bill, the smallest of the set, and assigned a place on the Army bill, another on which there is scarcely anything to do. Mr. Follett, a new member comes with a reputation for ability. He has charge of the sub-committee on the District of Columbia, assisted by Messrs. Hutchins and Cannon.

Among Mr. Springer's New Year's resolves was one to accept the position assigned to him by Mr. Carlisle, of chairman of the committee on expenditures in the Department of Justice; although he insists injustice has been done him and his constituents in the appointment. A conspicuous part awaits him, however, and he has an opportunity to distinguish himself in the first work of his committee. Hard things have been said of the Department of Justice since it passed under the control of Attorney-General Brewster, and Mr. Springer proposes to enter at once upon an investigation of the matter.

The Attorney-General, being the chief law officer of the government, it is by his opinions that the Executive is guided. The responsibility imposed upon him is momentous. He exercises a direction over the subordinate attorneys of the United States, and the Marshals of all the courts in all the judicial districts of all the states and territories. Upon him also devolves the selection of special counsel for the United States, whenever required by any Department of the Government. The Department of Justice should be as free of taint and as far above suspicion as the Supreme Court of the United States. The examinations will be carried on openly and Mr. Springer says those who have accused the Department will have a chance to tell all they know.

President Arthur's New Year's reception was a more interesting occasion than anything of the sort for years. The President manages to take a good deal of exercise on horseback this cold weather. He is paying careful attention to his health. Newspaper paragraphs have lately made him out to be ailing, but I do not think he has any reason to be anxious about himself.

It is known by this time to every public man in Washington that Mr. Arthur is doing little or nothing to secure a nomination for the Presidency. He knows that to seek the honor would probably be to lose it, and to lose it with ignominy. If he does nothing at all, his chances are better, and if some other man is nominated, there is, then, no humiliation in it for him.

ADAMS.

UNDERGROUND. A bill has been introduced in the New York legislature, requiring that all telegraph, telephone, and electric light wires, in cities of 500,000 population, shall be placed underground before Nov. 1885.

FAILURES. There were 235 failures in Boston, in 1883 the total amount being nearly 21 millions, only 8 millions below the aggregate in value of the failures of New York and Brooklyn for the same time.

NO CURE! NO PAY.
DR. LAWRENCE'S COUGH BALSAM.
is warranted to cure COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, SORE THROAT, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs.
We do not claim to cure consumption when thoroughly seated, but we do claim that thousands of lives might be saved every year by the timely use of Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam.
Many people imagine they have consumption when in reality they only have a bad cold, which can easily be cured by proper care and the right kind of medicine. We could fill columns with testimonials, but do not believe in that way of advertising, our idea is to let everybody that is afflicted with a cough try for themselves, and if not perfectly satisfied, return the empty bottle of the dealer of whom it was bought and receive their money back.
Price for Trial Size, 25 Cents, Family Size, $1.00 per Bottle.

For the Patriot.

My Dead Wife.

We lived together in peace and joy,
No one our union could destroy;
But although taken from your side,
I still remain your darling bride.

How oft your magic power stilled my pain,
When some would say it's all in vain;
They little knew the power you possessed,
To give to me my needed rest.

You, my partner on earth's sphere,
Have passed beyond your doubt and fear.
You know that God has redeemed your soul,
And given you a heavenly control.

Your days are peaceful as you pass along,
How oft you chant your evening song!
How sweet your slumbers are at night!
Yes, God will do all things right.

Our darling children you watch with care,
And with them your sweet pleasure share;
May their days on earth be spent for God,
And follow in the path that Jesus trod.

To all earth's children here below,
I wish them this great truth to know—
That God spake: "You must be born again,
Or the life on earth will be in vain."

Do unto others as you would have them do to you,
Nor worship within or without, as the Jew,
Remembering, if you've been blessed with earth's treasure,
'Tis your duty to be liberal and give with pleasure.

Come one and all and make your peace,
If you would have your troubles cease;
Dear ones, to-day hear Christ Jesus' voice,
Do come at once and make your choice.
JOHN MILTON WIGHT.

Farm and Garden.

Commercial Fertilizers.

[Concluded from last week.]

This knowledge may be gained by a careful study of the analysis of different crops furnished by our state chemist, combined with well conducted experiments in different fields of the farm, applying certain quantities of either or both of these elements in compound to small plots, and carefully noting the results. But if, perchance, we may apply more of either of these elements than is demanded for the wants of the immediate crop grown, they will not take to themselves wings and fly away, but will remain a sure investment, ready to respond to future drafts.

But in our practice, it should ever be borne in mind that these fertilizers should be made supplementary to, rather than a substitute for the barnyard manure made upon the farm. I know of a company manufacturing a fertilizer selling in the market for $40 and $42 per ton, that is using vessel loads of cotton seed meal merely for its chemical constituents. Would it not be wise for the farmers to buy the meal for $30 per ton and utilize its milk and fat producing qualities, and still retain nearly all the plant food upon the farm? I do not hesitate to say that the farmer who will judiciously buy and feed corn and cotton seed meal (the latter I consider the cheaper) until he has lost $40 (if there should be any loss) or the price of a ton of commercial fertilizer, will have a heap of the very best of of manure worth many tons of any fertilizer in the market. But there should be no loss in the proper feeding of cattle and swine, for when a creature does not pay for what it eats, it should have no place on a Massachusetts farm. I speak with some little experience and observation on this point, and believe that it is possible to select a stock of cattle and swine, and so feed and care for them that they shall return to their owner a fair cash value on all that they eat, leaving the manure for the cost of care and incidentals. And in the average year, with the means we have at hand, there need be hardly any limit to the amount of cornfodder and fodder corn produced, so the amount of stock kept and manure made will be governed only by the farmer's room, capital and enterprise. Such being the case there can be no question that the most economical method to be pursued in enriching our soils, is by stock raising and stock feeding.

Vinegar Adulteration.

It becomes the farmers and the fruit growers of the State to bestir themselves for early and effective action before the present Legislature. When they combine and show that they are in earnest, as much so as the representatives of other interests, they are sure of recognition and a good deal more. The cider-vinegar question is one of very great importance in the State, and should have the advocates of a pure and unadulterated article promptly and prominently in sight of both legislative branches. What was attempted to be done, and what was really done, in the last Legislature, is matter of common knowledge. An efficient bill on the subject of adulteration passed the House by a large majority, but the Senate killed it in a manner not easy to be forgotten. Hence there must be fresh application to the legislature this winter. We appeal to the farmers of the State to be alive at all points to their own interests in the Legislature, and to take early and combined action in behalf of an interest of such importance as cider vinegar and its adulteration. There are likewise many other interests which they should look constantly after, before the legislature, with an eager and even jealous watchfulness.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Anecdotes.

"No, sir, my daughter can never be yours."

"I don't want her to be my daughter," broke in the young ardent, "I want her to be my wife."

Pater: "Well, my boy, and how do you like college? It has turned out some good men.

Young hopeful: "Ya-as—she's just turned me out?" He had been expelled.

"Did you notice the asthetic appearance of Miss Giddigush, Amy?" asked a high school girl.

"I noticed she had a pimple on her nose," replied Amy, "but I didn't know the dictionary word for it."

A town young man went to call at a country farm-house to see his sweetheart, who had charge of the dairy. When the old farmer opened the door, he asked him timidly, "How is the milkmaid?"

The farmer slammed the door, and replied: "Our milk isn't made—it's got from the cow.

Puck: "A happy family. Neighbor—Your family looks contented and happy."

Mother—"Yes; the boys are happy because they are through with their whipping; and the girls are happy because they didn't get any."

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

The Prohibitory Convention.

On taking the chair, Hon. James F. Almy spoke at some length of the obstacles which now appear in the way of temperance reform. First of these he considers to be the fact that many well-meaning people cherish the mistaken idea that interference with the liquor traffic is an unwarrantable invasion of individual rights. He went on to say that the fact that not more than seven men in forty-five really affiliate with the liquor traffic, while the other thirty-eight would, at heart, be better pleased to see the whole traffic swept from the face of the earth, should both show the absurdity of sacrificing the wishes and the welfare of the many to the few, and should encourage friends of temperance to renewed efforts to arouse the majority to action. Agitation, hand-to-hand work, calm discussion and earnest pleading, are what are needed, and if these are needed, victory is sure in the end.

Household Receipts.

APPLE PUDDING. Pare about a dozen apples, and chop them up fine; then grate about half as much bread (in bulk); put the apples in a thick layer at the bottom of your pudding dish, sugar, nutmeg, and cinnamon to taste; then a layer of bread crumbs half the depth; then apples and again bread, adding to the bread at the top some small bits of butter. Pour over the whole half a tumber of cold water, and after the pudding has been made an hour, bake it in a hot oven about an hour.

CHOCOLATE CANDY. One pound and a half of brown sugar, half pint of milk; boil sugar and milk together fifteen minutes, then add a quarter of a pound of grated chocolate, butter size of an egg, one teaspoonful vanilla; boil till thick; pour into buttered pans; when nearly cold work in squares.

TO CLEAN BRASS. The Technologist says: "Rub the surface of the metal with rotten-stone and sweet oil, then rub off with a piece of cotton flannel, and polish with soft leather. A solution of oxalic acid rubbed over tarnished brass soon removes the tarnish, rendering the metal bright. The acid must be washed off with water, and the brass rubbed with whiting and soft leather. A mixture of muriatic acid and alum dissolved in water, imparts a golden color to brass articles that are steeped in it for a few seconds."

TO PRESERVE CLOTHES PINS. They should be boiled a few moments and quickly dried, once or twice a month, when they become more flexible and durable. Clothes lines will last longer and keep in better order for wash-day service, if occasionally treated in the same way.

☞ If a lady has a book-rack or a table she wishes to varnish, first put on a coat of linseed oil and then apply the shellac. The oil sinks into the pores of the wood and shows the grain. Pine, however, will not absorb it.

☞ If stove polish is mixed with very strong soap suds the lustre appears immediately, and the dust of the polish does not fly around as it usually does.

☞ Apples sliced very thin, fried in hot butter and sprinkled with pulverized sugar, make a very nice dish for tea or luncheon.

☞ Stale bread should be toasted in the oven, grated and put in a wooden box it is useful for frying fish, oysters, clams, croquettes, etc.

This and That.

☞ How the world has progressed within a century! George Washington, the first president of the United States, never saw a steamboat. John Adams, the second president of the United States, never saw a railroad. Andrew Jackson, the seventh president, knew nothing about the telegraph. Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth president, never dreamed of such a thing as the telephone.

☞ "Yes," remarked the economical storekeeper, "I expect a big run of custom this week. I told my wife I had the best stock of goods in the city and the sewing circle meets to morrow."

☞ We mount to heaven, often, on the ruins of our most cherished schemes; and find that what we thought our worst failures were really our grandest successes.

☞ A Beaufort bachelor so greatly admired the way in which his house keeper prepared coffee that he proposed and was accepted, only to find that the coffee was made by the hired girl.

☞ "Boots blacked inside, five cents." What particular advantage it is to have one's boots blacked upon the inside is not stated, but it is probably some innovation of fashion.

Conundrums.

When can you see through a hypocrite? When he has a pane (pain) in his head.

Why are nose and chin at variance continually? Because words are constantly passing between them.

Why are good singers like cheesecurds? They require to be pressed.

When does a bather capture a large bird? When he takes a duck in the water.

Why is a man with a counterfeit fifty-cent piece like a sorrowing widower? He wants a better half.

What is that, the fewer there are to guard it the safer it is? A secret.

From the well-known Real Estate Broker, No. 63 Church Street.
NEW HAVEN, CONN., August 4, 1882.
MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:
Gentlemen:—I had last month a severe malarial attack, lasting some three weeks. The common remedy, quinine, did not seem to operate or act as promptly as usual. A friend suggested a trial of your "Red Jacket Bitters," and I am pleased to inform you that I felt, within twenty-four hours after commencing their use, marked improvement, which has continued. I am satisfied of their curative properties, and shall keep them in my house.

A Heartless Attempt.

The daring and heartless attempt made on Sunday morning, to set fire to the large and comparatively new sale stable of Mr. Joshua Wilkins, in East Braintree, has caused intense excitement, not only in that village, but wherever Mr. Wilkins is known, and the news of the attempt has reached. This is not to be wondered at, for it is one of the most daring, persistent and inhuman attempts against property that has ever taken place in the town of Braintree, and without, apparently, a shadow of a motive. Mr. Wilkins has an excellent reputation as a business man, in the town, and also with those outside of it, who have had business transactions with him. There is, therefore, no known earthly reason why such an attempt should be made, in order to injure him. The particulars are these:

On Saturday night, a little after eight o'clock, Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins and a lady visitor, together with other members of the family, were setting chatting in the parlor, when the attention of the former was called by some one present to the sound of approaching footsteps toward the back door, over the loose plank walk, which had been put down since the occurrence of the present snow storm. Mr. Wilkins, who thought it might be one of the milk customers—who, it seems, is somewhat irregular in calling for the same—said, "Oh that's only so and so; he'll announce himself immediately;" and he added in a loud tone so that the individual might hear and reform his ways, "I wish that Allie Summers would come for his milk earlier and be more regular."

But the approaching visitor turned out to be somebody else than Allie Summers. Failing to announce themselves, Mr. Wilkins went to the door and on opening it, two men immediately rushed over the plank walk, and out to the street. This alarmed Mr. Wilkins, who, thinking that something was up, lit a lantern, and accompanied by a younger son, went out and examined the stable and other buildings, but saw nothing wrong. Concluding that the men he had seen were some miserable hen thieves, he returned to the house; but he could not rest. He went out and in, sometimes walking up and then down the street in front of the stable. But he neither could hear nor see anything more of the men.

He returned to the house and went upstairs to his chamber about 11 o'clock and sat down in a chair near one of the windows, which commands a view of the whole premises. While thus engaged he noticed a man standing in front of the stable door. He went out and the man hurriedly made his escape into the darkness. Again Mr. Wilkins walked up and down the street, and all around, and was thus occupied until about 4 o'clock, when, seeing that everything was safe, and that at that comparatively advanced hour of the morning, he returned to the house and went to bed. About five o'clock, Mrs. Wilkins thought she heard a man pass the window, going toward the street, and she told Mr. Wilkins what she had heard. Whereupon he got up and went out, but seeing nobody, and there being nothing wrong, to all appearances, about the buildings, he returned to the house once more and went to bed.

About seven o'clock, Patrick Quinn, a young man employed by Mr. Wilkins as hostler, and whose duty it is to open the stable every morning, called at the house for the key, as usual. He received the same and proceeded to the building. On opening and throwing back the door, he saw that the building was on fire. He dashed a pail of water upon the burning pile, and ran to the house and gave the alarm. Help being speedily on hand, the fire was soon put out.

The fire was evidently the work of some one well acquainted with the premises. The doors were all fastened and the only mode of exit by which the incendiary would have left the building, without leaving some one of the numerous doors unfastened, was through a slide door in the basement which could be pressed out at the bottom far enough to admit the passage of a man's body, without disturbing the fastenings.

The buildings, which consist of the main stable, a structure 30 x 70 feet, with an annex and carriage shed, are situated on the easterly side of Commercial street, and are about 100 feet from the dwelling-house. On the southeast corner, facing the house, is a small ell which is used as an office. Next to the office, on the inside, is the harness room. On the threshold of the harness-room doors the fire was built. The rascals brought a quantity of straw from the basement, and piling it up in the doorway of the harness-room, laid a train of straw from there to the grain chest, about ten feet distant, directly under the hay loft, and laying a couple of blankets over the pile in the doorway, saturated the whole with kerosene oil, then, pulling down the curtains in the office windows, which would prevent anyone in the house from seeing the light, set fire to the combustibles. The fire was planned in such a way that all exit for the imprisoned horses by the front way would be cut off, while a rear door had, with great cunning, been effectively fastened by dropping a bottle back of the rolls on which it was run, so as to necessitate the use of an axe, in case the fire had gained headway enough to have compelled the use of this mode of exit. The fire, when extinguished, had burned a hole through the double plank flooring, about six by twelve inches in dimension. The only thing which probably saved the building from total destruction was the placing of the woollen robes over the straw. These tended to smother the flames in some degree, and prevented them from spreading to the grain chest and hay loft.

Mr. Wilkins had in the basement of the stable two colts, two Jersey cows, and quite a number of hogs. On the first floor there were seventeen horses, including "Arbiter," and "Cruiser," both valuable horses, Mr. Wilkins having been offered $5000 for the former. Besides valuable harnesses, there were eleven carriages, and large quantities of both hay and straw.

Had the villians succeeded in their designs it would have involved a loss of $20,000. As Mr. Wilkins is a deservedly popular man, and has not an enemy in the world, to his knowledge, he can assign no motive for the deed, unless it was done out of pure malice.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER

REV. WM. T. WORTH
Recommends VEGETINE for Rheumatism and Sciatica:
FALL RIVER, MASS., May 13 1879.
MR. H. R. STEVENS—
Dear Sir: For some years I have been, at times, much troubled with acute attacks of rheumatism. I especially suffered tortures from Sciatica. By the advice of Friends who knew the benefits conferred by VEGETINE, I began its use, and since that time I have had no attack like those I previously suffered. For some time past I have had no return of the trouble, except occasionally a faint intimation, which disappeared upon taking a few doses of the VEGETINE. I also take pleasure in recording my testimony in favor of its excellent effect in abating an inveterate salt rheum, and I count it no small pleasure to have been thus made free.
Respectfully, WM. T. WORTH,
Pastor First M. E. Church.

For many years I have been a great sufferer from Rheumatism, and have never found anything that gave me the relief that Vegetine has. Therefore, I take pleasure in recommending it to any one suffering from Rheumatism, as being one of the best blood purifiers now in use. REV. A. COOK,

For the Patriot.

Childhood and Age.

Grandpa's pride was a laughing child
Of five sweet summers. Her parents had died
One year before,
Leaving her homeless. She was brought to the door
Of this old man's home, to cheer and bless
By laughter and song his wilderness.

The man was old, and poor and gray,
"Failing fast," as people say,
But kindly ever to his heavenly guest—
One of God's angels sent in quest
Of his weary soul.

"Papa and mamma are dead, you know,"
She said one day, with cheeks aglow,
"But if you'll let me, I'll take you
To tell me stories, and kiss me, too."

He smiled so sadly, she did not know
What next to say, it grieved her so;
She put up her rosy lips for a kiss—
'Twas the last of grandpa's earthly bliss.

* * * * * * * * *

The old man's thoughts were far away,
In the churchyard where his loved ones lay,
Covered with snow on that winter's day.
The tears rolled down his furrowed cheek,
He murmured, but he could not speak.
The angel of death had entered the door
And sealed his lips for evermore.

* * * * * * * * *

Dear children, in your innocent glee
Be kind to the aged, and you will see
God's blessings showered, like flakes of snow
On your pathway of life, until you go
To meet Daisy's grandpa, who died long ago.

Miscellany.

"Married?"

"Yes, married."

"But, Fred, it is impossible," cried Guyon Martindale, with a troubled countenance.

"It is not only possible," said his younger brother, irritably, "but it is true. I was married to her in last February. Of course, during our mother's lifetime I preserved the secret religiously. She wanted me to marry Hilda Bonnair. How could I tell her that I had already wedded a penniless girl without lineage or social standing? But my mother is dead, and I feel that I shall not be long in following her."

"Do not be despondent, Fred. The Doctor says that—"

"Oh, hang the doctor, with his solemn face and six-syllabled phrases!" impatiently interrupted Martindale. "I tell you I am dying, and I want you to go to Cedar Clove and bring Cora here."

"Of course, if it will relieve your mind," said Guyon Martindale, slowly.

"And lose no time," added his brother. "My poor little Cora! I never should have left her there by herself. I should have risked everything for her sake, as she risked everything for mine."

"What sort of a girl is she, Fred?"

"A jewel," feverishly answered the sick man, as he tossed to and fro upon his pillow. "A girl with a heart of gold and the beauty of Hebe. Stop a minute! I have the address here in my pocket-book. It is a farm-house on the Catskill road—a weary journey; but you won't mind it, for my sake, Guy. And be sure that you break it to her gently. Poor Cora—poor little thing! It will be a dreadful shock to her."

So Capt. Guyon Martindale left his brother to the care of his trained valet, and the hired nurse who had been brought from Philadelphia, and traveled up the Catskills in search of his brother's unknown wife.

"Fred was always a creature of impulse," he told himself. "Led by the first pair of bright eyes that came in his way. And either this woman was a manœuvering schemer, or a silly, simpering doll. It is a pity that such a complication should develop itself just now."

Cedar Clove was a wild wooded gorge, reached only by a winding, circuitous road. The Carson farm-house stood on a plateau of land, surrounded by pines and birches. An old negress opened the door to him.

"Miss Cora? She's done gone outen de farm-yard," said Cassy, "arter de red calf. 'Stonishing how offen dat calf gets into the wegitable garding! If marsa wants to see Miss Cora, he'd better go to de farm yard."

And she closed the door in his face, as if that was the end of the matter.

The voice of sweet, girlish laughter at the back of the house served as a guide to our bewildered hero, and here in the farm-yard he found the farmer's daughter, tying up a big-eyed young Alderney.

"You're a dreadful rogue, Sweetie," said she, shaking her pretty brown finger at the resisting calf; "but you'll never cheat me again—no, never again."

Captain Martindale stood still and looked at the lithe, graceful figure, in its worn calico gown, the blooming young face half hidden by the wide brimmed sun-bonnet, with a thrill of mingled admiration and disgust.

Yes, she was as beautiful as a Peri—there could be no question about that. But her coarse boots, her sunburned hands! The idea of Fred Martindale's wife in single combat with a red Alderney calf.

Captain Guyon's soul revolted from all this. And in the same moment Cora Carson turned and saw him.

He advanced toward her.

"You are Mrs. Frederic Martindale?" he asked.

She colored vividly.

"Then," she cried, "you know it all. But I cannot tell who you are."

"I am your husband's brother," he said, coldly.

"Capt. Guyon Martindale?"

She held out her hand, but he did not take it.

"The same. And I have come to escort you to your husband," he added, the sentiment of antipathy seeming to grow stronger and more strong, as he spoke on. "He is ill, and desires to have you with him. And you will oblige me by making every preparation as promptly as possible."

Cora looked at him, the color varying in her cheeks like red and white banners.

"Is—is he dead?" she faltered.

"No," Captain Martindale answered shortly. "What a very foolish question to ask!"

"Yes, I dare say I am very foolish," said Cora, clinging to the fence, and quite heedless of the pet Alderney, which was seeking in her pocket for apples. "But,—but it was so sudden! Yes, I will go with you."

So Captain Martindale took this lonely uncultivated sister-in-law of his to her husband's death-bed.

"She must have lived all her life in these wildernesses!" he thought. "Her gloves don't fit, her boots are outlandishly shaped, and the cut of her gown is something positively pre-Raphaelite! She might be pretty if she was decently dressed; but as it is, I can only wonder how on earth Fred ever fancied her."

Poor little Cora! She was only seventeen. She never had been out of the Catskills until now. Frederic Martindale had fallen in love with her, and stung by the rivalry of some rustic swain, had married her, while on a hunting excursion in the mountains, and she scarcely knew how to comport herself in these changed circumstances. And when at last Fred died—the third day after her arrival at Cape May—she felt herself shipwrecked on the shores of the great world.

"Black dresses?" she said. "Crape bonnets? But, Captain Martindale, I have no money to buy these things."

"Your husband has left you sufficient to maintain you comfortably," said Guyon, coldly. "Every widow is expected to wear mourning."

So there she sat, listless and silent, while the milliners and dressmakers surrounded her with billows of black crape and inky rolls of Henrietta cloth; and one evening she heard the family lawyer, who had arrived in the evening train, talking to her brother-in-law on the veranda below.

"Poor Fred! poor lad!" said Mr. Tape, sonorously blowing his nose. "I never was so surprised in my life as to hear that he was married. What sort of a girl is she now?"

"She belongs to the milkmaid genus," said Captain Martindale, scornfully. "How Fred ever came to marry her, I can't imagine."

"Pretty?"

"Rather; but coarse and common. She has no style, no education, no polish. What I am to do with her, I'm sure I don't know. It is a positive misfortune to be left with such an incubus on one's hands."

So far Cora had listened; then she sprang up, clasping both hands over her ears.

"He need not fear," she thought, with cheeks tingling as if every drop of blood in her veins were a separate needle thrust. "I will never be a burden to him. I will accept Aunt Melinda's offer to go to her as a companion and reader. I will never take a cent of the Martindale money. I have heard them say that the money was all Captain Guyon's, and I will never live upon his grudgingly-given charity."

And when the old lawyer sent up his compliments, and a request for an interview with Mrs. Frederic Martindale, the young widow was nowhere to be found.

She had gone away from Cape May.

"With the mourning outfit not completed!" said Miss Pringle, the dressmaker. "Poor dear! Trouble must have upset her mind."

"It is very strange," said Captain Martindale; "but if she prefers to go to her own people, let her go. It will certainly be an infinite relief to me, and of course her allowance must be continued to her just the same."

But the allowance, represented by a generous check, was returned, without a word of comment, to Capt. Martindale.

He shrugged his shoulders.

"Let her do as she pleases," he said, "I have done my best; I can do no more."

So ended chapter one; and in the fulfilment of time came chapter two.

Six years afterward, Captain Guyon Martindale was introduced, at Rome, to the young American beauty who was queening it in the gay circles of the seven-hilled city.

It was in the palazzo of the Prince Contadino, and as he looked at the slight, graceful figure seated in the shadow of a cluster of blossoming lemon-trees, a sudden wave of remembrance swept athwart his soul.

"Mrs. Falkland!" he said. "But there must be some mistake. It is Mrs. Martindale, my brother's widow."

In another instant the Princess Contadino was introducing them.

"A countrywoman of yours—Mrs. Falkland," she said, in her soft southern accent. "Il Capitano Martindale, I delight to see you two become friends."

Mrs. Falkland looked him full in the face, with a real composure which he found it difficult to comprehend.

She had "style" enough now. The budding promise of her youth had blossomed in the fulness of royal beauty. Indeed, he felt that she was condescending to him as she had allowed him to touch the tips of her exquisitely-gloved fingers for a second.

"You are thinking of our first meeting," she said, with the slightest elevation of her perfectly arched brows." "Ah, my poor Alderney calf! I often wonder what has become of her."

The laughing sentence broke the ice, and Captain Martindale took Mrs. Falkland into supper.

In the course of the evening he learned why she had adopted the name of the old aunt, who had taken her to Europe, and was still living here with her—an eccentric sister of the Catskill farmer. And Cora Carson, the untutored child of the wilderness, was now a cultivated, graceful woman, rich in all that makes life beautiful and attractive."

"It is like a magic transformation," Captain Guyon Martindale declared to himself. "I never could have believed it if I had not witnessed it with my own eyes. She is the loveliest woman I ever saw in my life. It is no wonder that the American society in Rome is wild about her. But I can't think it true that she really likes that young colonel of hussars, who follows her about like her shadow."

When jealousy takes the field love is not far off. And Captain Guyon Martindale began positively to hate Colonel Sandifer Willoughby.

"Am I in love with my brother's widow?" he asked himself. "Alas, it is rather late to question the state of my heart!"

He asked Cora to be his wife one purple summer twilight, as they sat in the oleander-wreathed balcony of the old palazzo where Mrs. Falkland lived.

"No," she said, calmly. I will not marry you, Captain Martindale. I do not love you. There was a time once when I might have learned to care for you. You remember it, perhaps—when I was newly widowed and alone. But you were cold and unsympathetic—even cruel to me. 'You never could see,' you said, 'how Fred came to fancy me. I was but a burden—an incubus.' And the country milkmaid had more penetration than you believed, Captain Guyon Martindale. The past is past, but if ever in the future you have to deal with a wounded or inexperienced spirit, try and be more gentle and considerate."

And she married the English colonel of hussars, after all.

It was a cruel blow to Capt. Guyon Martindale, but he could not deny that he had deserved it.

"If one could only foresee the future!" he groaned, within himself.—Helen Forest Graves.

Japanese Funeral.

The first indication of the death of a Japanese is by the turning bottom up of all movable things in the house and by turning inside out of all his clothes. A priest arrives on the scene and prays, while friends of the deceased attend to the details of grave digging, coffins, etc., while one friend in robes of ceremony stands at the door to receive visits of condolence from all comers. When the corpse is washed, it is clad in a white shroud and placed in a sitting posture in one of the peculiar coffins of the country, on which is painted his free pass to heaven. The procession then forms, headed by torchbearers, and moves to the inclosure of a temple, where a grave has been dug big enough for two, if the deceased be married, and, after a lot of clap-trap, is lowered to its final resting place. A mournful dirge is then executed on what look like copper wash-bowls, and everyone goes home to pray for the soul of the departed.

Our Supreme Judge.

There is not a handsomer position in public service than to be judge of the Supreme Court at Washington. It yields $10,000 a year for life, and innumerable privileges. The judges do not work hard. They take five months' vacation, and the court when in session only sits four hours a day five times a week. Each one has a servant assigned him. This is how the custom began: The judges complained that it was too hard for them to be compelled to carry their heavy law books home from the library. A colored man was given them for that duty. Plenty of wagons are at hand to do it now, but the servants have never been cut off, and now they are kept as butlers and footmen, but still paid by the government $1,000 a year. The judges did not make their usual call, at the opening of the current session of Congress, at the White House because of Mr. Arthur's absence, but they will be tendered the usual dinner there early in the winter. Big Justice Gray, of Massachusetts, is the only bachelor of the court, and as such is so much sought after in society that Chief-Justice Waite often says that he shall never get any work out of his youngest associate until he marries or announce a vow of perpetual celibacy.

No Sale There.

A man who was selling polish, or something of that sort, entered the yard of a colored family, on Illinois street and inquired of a boy who sat on the door steps:

"Bub," is your mammy home?"

"Yes."

The agent raised his hand to knock on the door, but it was opened and a woman stuck her head out and exclaimed:

"Go right away, sah—go right away. I heard you speakin' to de boy, and I wants you to distinctly understan' dat de agent who doan' inquar' for de lady of de house doan' make no sale."

Good Roads.

Nothing pays better than good country roads. It costs something to secure them, but they are the arteries which connect city and country, along which the life current of business prosperity, safety and solid comfort continually flows. Bad roads, full of chuckholes, sloughs and bottomless mud, kill time, teams and temper, and cultivate profanity at an alarming rate. Be sure that money, intelligently expended is money wisely invested, and sure to realize satisfactory results. —Practical Farmer.

An Employer with a Heart.

In an interior town in this state there is a manufacturer who up to last week has endeavored to keep his help employed. He is not a man of much ostentation. He has even the reputation of being a "close" man. The other day this man called his help together. It was an unusual proceeding on his part, and occasioned much comment. The help met in the principal room of the factory, and awaited results. The employer entered alone, and standing on a shoe-box, addressed the men as follows:

"Boys, I have called you together to-day to submit a proposition. I want you to consider it well, and not give me a hasty answer. Business is very dull. I have kept you at work long after the other shops have closed. I cannot afford to do it longer without a reduction of wages. This is something I do not want to do if it can be avoided. It is for you to say whether the shop will be closed or not after hearing my proposal. It is briefly this: In order to keep at work, and stock up goods for the winter, I will be forced to an extra expense of twenty-five per cent. Now, before you answer me, I want you to appoint a committee to go to the office and examine the accounts, note the state of the markets and of trade, and satisfy yourselves that my statements are correct. My proposal is this: If you agree to divide this extra expense with me, I will keep the shop running, and bear my portion of the loss, in the hope of making it up when business is good. Should business suddenly revive, I will restore your wages to the present basis. This is all I have to say. Meet me here to-morrow at this hour and give me your answer."

Stepping off the shoe-box he left the room. The help were surprised, for such a proposition was entirely without precedence in the history of the business. Their manhood was touched. The vote was unanimous to accept the proposition. A resolution was drawn up thanking the employer for the course he had adopted, and a committee appointed to present it, pledging the help to stand by their employer and to accept two-thirds of the loss instead of half. The result is that that factory is running to-day, and the three hundred hands are contented and even happy.—Boston Herald.

What he had Seen.

A man named Stacy, the owner of a splendid drinking saloon in New York, signed the pledge lately and closed his house. Hearing that a party of lads had formed themselves into a temperance society he gave them his experience as a rumseller. "I have sold liquor," said Mr. Stacy, "for eleven years—long enough for me to see the beginning and end of its effects. I have seen a man take his first glass of liquor in my place, and afterwards fill the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon who cannot now buy his dinner. I can recall twenty customers worth from $100,000 to $500,000, who are now without money, place and friends." He warned boys against entering saloons on any pretext. He stated that he had seen many a young fellow, a member of the temperance society, come in with a friend and wait while he drank. "No, no," he would say, "I never touch it. Thanks all the same." Presently rather than seem churlish, he would take a glass of cider or harmless lemonade. "The lemonade was nothing," said the rumseller, "but I knew how it would end. The only safety, boys, for any man, no matter how strong his resolution, is outside the door of a saloon."

Have You Seen Him?

Do you know the man who keeps the door open? He is everywhere now-a-days. You will find him in the depots. He holds the door open and looks up and down the railroad track to see if the train is coming. No matter how the inmates of the room may shake and shiver with the cold, he doesn't feel it, and he has not the least sympathy in the world for others' suffering. He is a nuisance,—a chilly abomination. When he enters a railroad car he leaves the door wide open, and a draft of cold air and gusts of snow come whirling in behind him; and if he ever enters a store he never closes the door after him. This is the season of his delight. He is happy now—happy because he can make his fellow-mortals unhappy. You all know him—you all must have seen him—for his name is legion and he is ubiquitous. His early education was neglected. Naturally ill-bred and coarse, he knows not a single polite or generous impulse, and when he is forced to go out of the world entirely there are people who will be glad to rise up and slam the door upon him for all eternity.—Reading Chronicle.

Trimming Elephant's Feet.

The whole of a day was spent recently at Bridgeport, Conn., by five men in trimming the feet of two elephants. The operation is performed, the New Haven Register says, once on the road, once in the fall, and again in the spring. The sole of an elephant's foot is covered with a thick horny substance which, as it grows thicker, tends to contract and crack, often laming the animal. At the time of trimming the elephant stands on three legs and places the foot to be operated upon across a large tub. Two men hold the leg down, and one stands at the animal's head to prevent him from turning. Then with a two-foot drawing knife one man shaves off great pieces of bone from the sole of the foot. The elephant holds the foot high of his own accord, seeming to understand what the men are doing, and after the operation he flourishes his trunk, trumpets, and expresses sincere thanks.

Rum and Taxes.

Everybody knows that our country raises a revenue of $86,000,000 a year on spirituous liquors, and also that at present the government does not need this sum to pay running expenses, consequently the question as to what shall be done with the surplus revenue arises. The whiskey men clamor loudly for the abolition of the tax on their product, and it is well for land owners and laboring men the country over, to reflect upon the question and decide whether it is wise to let the burden of taxation be wholly rolled from a trade which brings plenty of profit even now, when the burden on houses, farms and shops might be made correspondingly lighter.

The letter of ex-Senator Blaine on this question is worth attention even though here in Massachusetts Blaine is not admired as he is in other states. He proposes that the total revenue from spirits be turned over to the states. He asks:

Could it be regarded as wise statesmanship to continue the heavy, oppressive direct tax on all property under the State Government and at the same time command a hurtful luxury like spirits to go free? That would be a folly which no other Government on the globe could by any possibility commit. The tax on spirits oppresses no one. It is paid only by the consumer, and the most extreme advocate of temperance cannot maintain that taxing the article increases its consumption.

The amount yielded by the tax on spirituous and malt liquors last year was over $86,000,000. On the basis of the census of 1880 it would pay about $1.75 per capita to all the people. The tendency would be to increase rather than diminish the ratio as time wore on. Illicit distilleries would disappear when every State and every town should come to realize that it was being defrauded of its own revenue by permitting or winking at the violation of law. On the basis of $1.75 per head the relief to the States would be very great.

But the more I have reflected upon it the more evident it has become to my mind that it is wiser to tax whiskey than to tax farms and homesteads and shops, and that it would be an act of incalculable folly to remit the $86,000,000 instead of giving it to the States for the relief of the oppressive local taxation."

If the taxpayer wishes to have an ... his poll taxes taken from his pocket yearly, he can support the project of abolishing the internal revenue taxes.—Athol Chronicle.

An Old Church.

The most interesting of all sights is the grand old mission church of San Xavier, nine miles from Tuscon, on the Papago reservation. This mission was founded in 1654, when the Papago (or Pima) Indians were supposed to have accepted the Christian religion. The church of San Xavier was begun about the year 1700, and finished in 1798, excepting one of the towers, which is yet unfinished. The style of architecture is Moorish. The lines are wonderfully perfect. It is in the form of a cross, 70 by 115 feet, and has a well formed dome. A balustrade surmounts the walls. The front is covered with scroll work, intricate, interesting and partly decayed. Over the front is a life-size bust of St. Xavier. The interior is literally covered with frescoes. The altar is adorned with gilded scroll-work. The statues are as numerous as the paintings. The tiling on the floor is much defaced and but little left. That of the roof is nearly all as perfect as when laid. Its manufacture is one of the lost arts. There is a chime of four good-sized bells in the tower that have a soft, sweet sound. Ascending to the roof, you walk up long, narrow stairs in solid walls. But one can go at a time. The same is true in going to the gallery of the church. It is marvellous that so long ago, and in such a place, such architecture, ornaments, painting and sculpture were so well executed. You are admitted by two of the Papago signors, who have it in charge. The admittance fee is fifty cents for each person.

A California Epitaph.

Here is a fresh epitaph from a California grave-stone, contributed by an esteemed correspondent of the Hyde Park Gazette:

"Here lies old thirty-five per cent.
The more he got the more he lent;
The more he got the more he craved;
The more he made the more he shaved—
Good God! Can such a soul be saved."

A Bride's Dowry in India.

One of the daughters of Meer Baba, Nawab of Surat, has recently been married, and this is what the people saw who gathered to see the bride's dowry carried to the bridegroom's house: A cavalcade of elephants, horses, carriages and palkees led the procession. After them came a number of female servants, all in snow-white clothes, each bearing in her hands a covered tray. About fifty youths followed, with rose-water decanters of silver on silver salvers. Then came five hundred coolies, some with magnificent bedsteads, with curtains, pillows, etc., others with swings, benches, boxes, cupboards of various designs, sofas, chairs, tables, and, in short, all the paraphernalia of a modern house. These were followed by seventy-five women, each carrying a tray of sweetmeats. One hundred men with cooking utensils brought up the rear, some of them carrying on their heads basket-loads of lamps, wall-shades, chandeliers, etc.

Winter Reunion.

The Seth Spear family Association held its annual family gathering on Tuesday evening, at Faxon Hall, between sixty and seventy members being present. Although the party was not as large as on the previous meeting, last year, yet it was well represented. Among those present were Mr. Hiram W. Blanchard, wife and daughter-in-law from Boston; Mrs. G. Boylston Nightingale, son and daughter from Cambridge; Mr. Warren Spear, sons and daughter from Charlestown, and Mr. Samuel A. Spear and wife from Weymouth. Probably there were others from out of town whom we did not know.

The older portion of the family were represented by Mr. Ebenezer Adams and wife, Mr. John L. Souther and wife and Mr. Seth Spear and wife, and these ladies and gentlemen entered into the pleasure of the evening with as much zest as many of the younger portion.

After partaking of an excellent supper, the company proceeded to the upper hall, where a business meeting was called. After the election of officers and other business relating to the constitution and by-laws were transacted, a very pleasing entertainment, consisting of instrumental and vocal music and recitations was listened to with great pleasure. The music by the Loud family was excellent; this family have great musical ability, and their their little son Walter has certainly a wonderful talent. His performance on the violin was listened to with great pleasure and called forth much praise. Miss Annie Marsh and her brother played a duet on the piano which was loudly applauded. The singing by Miss Carrie Spear was very fine; she was aided by Misses Addie Berry and Lizzie M. Newcomb, the accompaniment was played by Mrs. F. W. Loud. Master Edson Loud rendered a fine solo on the cornet. The recitations by Master Willie Worster, Miss Eva Spear and little Mamie Blake, were quite pleasing.

At the conclusion of this part of the entertainment the hall was cleared of the settees and a few of the younger portion of the family were gliding gracefully over the floor, keeping time to music by the Loud family. At an early hour the family bade each other good night and separated, feeling that they had enjoyed a pleasant evening in renewing old friendships.

Gas Light Company.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Citizens' Gas Light Company, held on the 16th inst., the following officers were elected:

President, William G. Sheen.

Secretary and Treasurer, Charles A. Howland.

Directors, William G. Sheen, Theo. King, Jr., William A. Hodges, J. Henry Emrey, George Saville, William B. Rice, John O. Holden, Charles A. Howland and Edwin B. Pratt.

We are pleased to learn that this company is in a healthy, flourishing condition. That the amount of gas consumed by our citizens has been much larger than in former years, and that the gas manufactured by the company is of excellent quality; above the standard, and better than that burned in Boston. The State Inspector, who has recently tested it, says it is 19.2 candle power, which is unusually good, as the legal standard is only 15.0. It is also very free from impurities, viz:—

| | Citizens. | Standard. |
|---|---|---|
| Sulphur, grains per 100 ft. | 18.0 | 20. |
| Ammonia, " " " " | 5.4 | 10. |

A semi-annual dividend of three per cent. has been declared.

ROB ROY. To all lovers of Sir Walter Scott's prose and poetry the play to be given in Town Hall the evening of the 25th, will be an interesting event. It is a dramatization of the romance of "Rob Roy." The characters will be represented in full Highland costume with all fitting accompaniments of music, scenery, etc. Indeed, in this regard Clan McGregor, under whose auspices the play is to be brought out, has spared no expense. The actors are for the most part workers in our granite industry; they are all amateurs, and though they may not exhibit the finished performance of professionals, they will act their parts with all the delightful freshness, earnestness and desire to please of amateurs. This most especially, as actors and actresses are Scotch, and will enter into the spirit of the play and bring out all its humor and pathos. Their rehearsals promise a fine performance. For details see advertisement in another column.

A QUILTING BEE. Mr. D. Fred. French invited a few of his lady friends to partake of his hospitality, and to tack together three quilts which he had made during his spare moments. These quilts were very large and handsome; the squares were all cut and made by Mr. French, and the ladies pronounced the work first class. He is now engaged in making another quilt of the log cabin pattern. The party consisted of Mrs. Asa Wellington, Mrs. Dr. Harlow, Miss Ellen Underwood, Mrs. George J. Jones, Mrs. Thomas G. Emerson, Miss Julia Underwood, Mrs. M. A. Perkins, Miss Mary Perkins and Mrs. M. E. Green. The party worked well, especially during the dinner hour, and they were all much pleased to think they were the favored ones on this occasion.

WATER WORKS. Some of the prominent citizens of the town, believing that the Quincy Water Works should be in the hands of Quincy people, have called a meeting at the Lyceum room on Tuesday evening next, as will be seen by a notice in our columns. They invite all who are anyway interested. The officers of the Water Company will be present and give such information as may be of interest to the meeting. There is now an opportunity for the citizens of Quincy to purchase a controlling interest in the stock of this company.

RESIGNED. Mr. George A. Ordway, who has had charge of the almshouse in Quincy for a number of years, has sent in his resignation to take effect on the first of February. He informs us that his wife's feeble health has caused him to resign the arduous duties of this institution. He says he intends to lease the building on Temple street, now occupied by Mr. George F. Wilson, for the purpose of keeping a first-class restaurant.

Mr. Fairbanks appears with excellent recommendations, and alone would furnish a delightful entertainment, while Mr. Young is widely known as a soloist having few equals. We advise all to try to be there.

☞ The Myopia Club held its first assembly at the Skating Rink last Tuesday evening and it was a decided success in every particular. One of the largest parties which has ever visited the rink greeted the return of "Quincy's favorite orchestra," and showed by their happy faces that they appreciated the excellence of the music, and it is the wish of all that success will attend the Myopia Club.

ODD FELLOWS. The movement for the new lodge in Quincy is still booming, and there will probably be proposed for membership at the start about one hundred names. Of course, some of these may be rejected, but care has been taken in asking gentlemen to join and it is believed most of the persons proposed are of an upright character and will be acceptable.

The committee on charters of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts will visit Quincy next Tuesday, and they are to be entertained by the Charter Odd Fellows.

Mr. James H. Bell, the gentleman who contributed the communications of last week and this week to the PATRIOT, is Vice Grand of Forest Lodge, No. 148, of Hyde Park, Mass.

BREAKING AND ENTERING. The residence of Capt. George Spear, who resides off Mill street, Quincy, was entered on Tuesday morning last, by breaking a pane of glass and moving the fastenings. It seems that Mr. Spear left home to go to the village, and as he lives alone, he locked his residence, and placed a notice on the door stating that he would return at noon. Having finished his business, he returned about eleven o'clock, one hour sooner than he had expected. Fortunately the rogue had not had time to search for plunder, and when he saw the owner coming, quickly decamped.

FIRE. The alarm at about 3.15 Thursday afternoon from box 37, was caused by a fire discovered in a small barn on the premises owned by Mrs. Lawton, on School street. The flames had gained such headway before the steamer could get a stream upon it that the building and contents were almost entirely destroyed. The barn was occupied by Mr. Philip C. Tucker, teamster for the firm of Frederick & Field.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

On Wednesday evening, the "jug-breaking" took place in the vestry of the Washington street Congregational Church, in the presence of some hundred and thirty ladies and gentlemen, and we think it would be hard to find a more social, genial gathering in any part of the town than was there assembled. Mr. Fred H. Smith, as jug-breaker, was all that could be desired, and made a neat opening speech, before cracking the jugs in a scientific manner. Mr. Geo. A. Sidelinger counted the contents, and Mr. Joseph L. Whiton, as treasurer of the society, received the funds. The jugs numbered twenty-seven, each was labelled with the owner's name, and the amount total ($217.91) was highly satisfactory, many, indeed, being agreeably surprised. This sum, together with the money taken at the door and for refreshments, gave a clear gain of about $250. The following is a list of the names of jug holders, and the amount each jug contained:

VULTURE 4.

The Vulture Engine Company's ball will be given in Faxon Hall next week. The proceeds will be given to the ladies' charitable societies of Quincy; enough tickets have been taken by three members of the company to pay expenses, and it is hoped that the public will take sufficient interest in the affair to make the same a decided success, thereby insuring a goodly amount to aid in the work carried on by these societies.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Albert C. Newcomb left on Monday for Red Bank, New Jersey, where he will engage in carpentry, building at that place being quite good.

Mr. Clarence Sampson has been very sick with pleurisy fever, but is now more comfortable.

Mr. W. Henry Dean has returned home from the South, having been obliged to short n his stay there by an attack of malarial fever.

Mr. James H. Slade has been quite sick with pneumonia the past week, but is now somewhat improved.

Capt. Daniel Higgins spent the first of the week at home, leaving on Tuesday morning for Philadelphia, where he will load a cargo for the West Indies.

Mr. Joseph Linnell, whom we stated would start as an expressman, has changed his mind, and will continue in the fish business.

SHIPPING.

Arrived, Jan. 17th, schooner Mary Farror, Capt. Crougon, from Belfast, Me., with hay for J. F. Sheppard & Son.

Recaptured.

In August, 1882, Mr. Andrew Johnson, who resided on Squantum street, North Quincy, was robbed of $47 in bills by a tramp whom he had met on the road and who asked permission to ride with him. He was arrested and brought before the District Court, found guilty and sentenced to one year in the House of Correction at Dedham. The thief's name was Michael O'Hara; he lived near the Old Colony depot in Boston, and was known as a pretty hard "ticket." The officers in the city having several warrants against him.

As Officer Furnald was taking the rascal through Boston to Dedham, O Hara slipped the hand-cuffs, shoved the officer into the street and took to his heels. It was rather a bold act, successfully performed, and it made the officer feel rather blue. But he is happier now.

On Tuesday last, Officer Peabody of Boston, who with others had been watching for O'Hara for other wickedness, succeeded in arresting him at 29 Rochester street, Boston. He was found concealed in a closet, under a woman's hanging shirt. When arrested he told the officer that if he had known who his early caller was he would have skipped to the roof and taken his chances on a common clothes line.

He was brought before Justice Churchill in Boston, on Tuesday last, for an assault on Thomas Jenkins, and held in $500 for trial in the Superior Court. There are other charges against him for breaking and entering, etc., and we learn that Officer Furnald will procure a writ and bring him to the District Court in Quincy soon.

The Boston Star says the chances are that "Smucksy," as he is called in Boston, will have ample opportunity for some years to come to study the architecture of the Concord and Dedham penal institutions. For the manner in which the several Boston officers have worked in the case, and especially Patrolman Peabody, they are certainly deserving of praise.

SURPRISE. On Thursday evening, several members of the Good Templar lodge in this town surprised one of their number, Mr. Charles Rich, at his residence on Pond street. A pleasant evening was passed, and the visitors left behind them, on departing, a silver cake basket. Mr. Charles Hersey made the presentation speech.

☞ A lady in Washington painted a placque in the most exquisite manner, and expressed it to a friend. Soon after a note of acknowledgment came, in which the lady stated that, "It is altogther too nice to use every day, so I only use it for a bread plate when we have company."

☞ Secretary Folger issued on Saturday the 125th call for the redemption of bonds of the 3 per cent. loan of 1882. He wants to the amount of $10,000,000.

On Wednesday evening one of those pleasing entertainments, for which Wollaston and its people are noted, was given in the Baptist Church, for the benefit of the L. W. Lovell Chemical Engine Company. Every seat in the church was occupied, and a rich treat was enjoyed. The programme opened with a short address by George F. Pinkham, Esq., followed by solos, duetts and a trio, by Mr. S. M. King, Miss Mary Howe, and Mrs. Jennie P. Walker, all of which were excellent and received encores. Mrs. W. C. Pierce was the pianist. The whistling by Prof. F. E. Hansell was very good, and he, too, was recalled. The readings of Miss Lizzie L. Maldt were the feature of the evening, and each selection was loudly encored. The whole programme was perfection, and reflected credit upon those having it in charge and the CHEMICAL COMPANY.

Mr. Pinkham's remarks were a hurried review of the history of fire apparatus from the time the idea such a protection was conceived to the present time, showing the rapid progress that had been made, especially in recent years. As late as the sixteenth century the only instruments used in England for putting out fire were water syringes, or "hand squirts," which were operated by three men. The hand engines, or "tubs," of the firemen came next, and in the recollection of many have come into general use the steam engine and chemical, the latter being patented in 1870. It was in 1876, he said, when the good people of Wollaston, alarmed by the frequency of fires in their then little village, demanded protection, and it was then the chemical now known as the "L. W. Lovell Chemical Engine, No. 1," was purchased. In November of the same year the company was organized as follows:

Foreman—John M. Call.
Asst. Foreman—Israel Waterhouse.
1st Chemical—Q. A. Faunce.
2d Chemical—H. O. Fairbanks.
1st Engineer—J. D. Rollins.
2d Engineer—Isaiah White.
Leading Hoseman—W. C. Seelye.
Asst. Hoseman—H. T. Whitman.
Steward—A. G. Olney.
Clerk and Treasurer—S. T. Dame.

The remainder of the company acted as bucket-men, and were as follows: Ebenezer H. Sanborn, A. A. Lincoln, Jr., Chas. R. Sherman, Daniel B. Lincoln, Joseph C. Russell, Geo. F. Pinkham, Lucius W. Lovell, Francis L. Hayes, Charles T. Baker, Richard Polson.

The company attended its first fire Dec. 10, 1876, it being the Ditmar's Dualin Manufactory at Atlantic. The only accident of a serious nature that has happened to any of the company was to Mr. W. C. Seelye, May 20, 1878, at the burning of the house owned by Eleazer Frederick, on Hancock street, next to Mr. Charles C. Brackett's.

The company has had in all fifty-five members and three commanders. John M. Call, who served three years and resigned; Joshua D. Robbins, who served one year and declined a re-election; and W. C. Seelye, who is now on his fourth year. It has answered to sixty-eight alarms of fire, and has always been ready to do its full share of work.

Wollaston should feel safe with such an efficient body of men, ready at a moment's notice to render needed assistance.

Temperance Lecture.

Hon. John B. Finch, of Nebraska, gave a very able and interesting lecture on temperance at the Town Hall, on Saturday evening last. Among the many things that he endeavored to force upon the audience, was the fact that the people had got to take decided action in regard to rum-selling if they wish to maintain this free government another hundred years. The corruption, pauperism and crime in every large city, particularly in those wards where there is a rum hole at nearly every door, is so great that it will be impossible to have a free government many generations longer if this evil exists. The free ballot will be of no account. The cities will control the States, and the corrupt wards by their fraudulent returns will hold the power in the cities.

Mr. Finch is a Democrat and a lawyer, and has seen enough of the misery and crime occasioned by rum drinking to convince him that unless a stop is put to this evil which is corrupting all good society, the country must go to ruin.

The evening was not inviting, and the audience was small; but those who were present felt well repaid for the inconvenience they had undergone to be present.

We learn that Mr. Finch has been requested to visit Quincy again next month, and he has decided to do so. We predict a full house for him.

District Court, Quincy.

The following criminal cases have been before the District Court this week:

John Ramage, of Quincy, for being drunk; fined $1 and costs.

Bernard Collins, for vagrancy; sent to the House of Correction for six months.

John Downey, of Weymouth, for being drunk, was fined $1 and costs; for disturbing the peace, he was fined $10 and costs.

Dennis Moynihan, of Weymouth, for an assault on his wife. He was ordered to pay the costs, and give bonds in $200 to keep the peace for six months.

Elmer Pshaw, Patrick Heffernan and Frederick Brown, of Taunton, for larceny from the shoe shop of David S. Murray of South Weymouth; discharged for want of evidence. They were re-arrested and taken to Abington.

John Watson, for vagrancy, was sent to the House of Correction for six months.

☞ Upholstery, draperies and curtains, are imported, furnished and put up in the finest style, at very low prices, and at short notice by Paine's Furniture Co. of Boston. They send men all over the country to do this work. Samples of materials and designs are sent by mail, and skilled workmen are sent to take measures and estimate the cost. This firm has on hand an immence stock of the richest goods, anywhere to be found, and at the lowest prices. It is surprising, the amount of goods they furnish, for so little money. When you go to Boston and wish to see the finest stock of furniture, in all the new styles, visit Paine's on Canal st., opposite the Boston and Maine depot.

☞ The Capitola Waltzes for piano, by Emil Auerbach, are simply elegant. See special offer of new music in advertisement on this page. 4w

Wollaston Items.

A few days ago, while at the depot waiting for the "iron horse," "Newport" overheard the following conversation: "I shall certainly advise my son to settle here." "Why?" asked his friend. And the reply was, "Because you all seem to be wide-awake here, which is as necessary to the success of the place as a fine location is." Now it seems to the writer that there is a great deal of truth in the above remark, and he often thinks that the good times that are ever being planned by her citizens, furnishes not only those who attend a great deal of pleasure, but seem to spread far and wide the fact that Wollaston is a live locality.

Some have asked, where was "Newport" last week; well, he was away.

Since my last, the Knights of Honor have had a public installation of their officers, and all accounts say it was up to the standard.

On Friday evening, January 11, the third in the course of dances took place in Wollaston Hall, and like the others, was well attended, and "what a jolly time we are having," was heard from all. Only one suggestion to the committee, and that is, when providing refreshments, have enough to go around. As it was, Messrs. B. and W. each had one bite of the cracker and the rest looked on. However, as the last strains of "Over the garden wall" grew fainter and fainter, the couples bade one another "bye bye," and "see you at the leap year" was heard from all.

The leap year party is to be the social event of the season, and the ladies in charge have worked to outdo their better halves. We predict success; and as "Newport" has been asked to take a front seat in the gallery, in my next I will give you the details.

Wednesday evening our celebrated Fire Company invited us to a concert held at the Baptist Church, and as we noticed the representative of the PATRIOT in the hall, we will not go into any detailed account, but, suffice it to say, the large audience present were well pleased.

It is rumored that the Knights of Honor have something on the tapis to keep the ball rolling. All right; put us down for some tickets.

The K. and L. of H. meet on Tuesday in their hall, for an evening of readings and music. NEWPORT.

Meigs' Elevated Railroad.

The history of the important improvements for the public welfare almost invariably shows opposition in proportion to their value. For four years Capt. J. V. Meigs has plead with the Legislature of Massachusetts for permission, by charter, to construct, by the permission of any city or town, an elevated railroad in such city or town, where the board of aldermen or selectmen may choose to locate it. He simply asks a charter similar to that granted to any steam or horse railroad; nothing more, nothing less. Why deny him and his associates this reasonable request? The fact is this: Capt. Meigs' system of railroad is well known to the managers of the present horse and steam roads as a decided improvement. A charter for trial will so prove it to the people who travel; hence the determined opposition on the part of these corporations. The best engineers and experts have testified to the superior practicability and safety of his roads and rolling stock, so far as the they could judge from working models.

But it is said if Meigs' system is so good, "why don't he build two or three miles along some barren shore, away from human habitations? If successful, then we will believe him, and the Legislature will grant him a charter." Meigs is a poor man. What capitalist will advance $100,000 for a mere experiment. Why not treat a system so well backed by the testimony of engineers—a system which promises to give to the public safe, rapid, cheap and comfortable transit,—why not treat it as leniently as a Cape Cod Canal or a Hoosac Tunnel. The cry of certain railway corporations, speaking through a few house-owners in the city, about obstructing light, etc., is "too thin." If any damage is done to house property in this way, the owners can have the same redress that other roads are liable to.

The fact is simply this: It is a road for the people, and the people are going to have it. A. W. S.

PUBLIC HEALTH. There will be a public hearing at the State House on Wednesday next, Jan. 23d, at 10.30 A. M., before the legislative committee on Public Health, on that part of the order that relates to the pollution of Boston's water supply. This is a very important matter and needs a careful attention. The object is to pass a law that will better protect sources of water supply all over the State. This is a subject that interests nearly every citizen, to a greater or less extent, and particularly at the present time the citizens of Quincy; as they are to be supplied with water by a company. Our townsman, Hon. Wm. A. Hodges, is on this committee, and we believe he will be found a very able member.

☞ Harper's Magazine for February is a strong number in both its literary and artistic features. The two serial novels, William Black's "Judith Shakespeare," and the Rev. E. P. Roe's "Nature's Serial Story," have a commanding interest. The frontispiece engraving, from Abbey's drawing, "The Bible Reading," is an illustration for Black's novel; and both Dielman and Gibson have done their best work for "Nature's Serial Story." For Sale in Quincy at Souther's periodical store.

☞ The President has issued a proclamation suggesting the propriety of commemorating the 100th anniversary of the surrender by Washington of his commission.

☞ It is reported from Washington that a plan is to be submitted to Congress for the pensioning of every soldier of the late war, whether suffering injury or not.

☞ The largest and finest bridge in America is at Cabin John Bridge, six miles from Washington, over the Aqueduct road. The name of the secretary of war is left blank on the inscription. It was Jefferson Davis.

☞ The New York Tribune gives statistics to show that 1883 was a year of remarkably large and active business, if it was one of small profits.

Commissioners' Meeting.

The County Commissioners of the several counties of the State held a meeting at the Quincy House in Boston, on Thursday, to talk on matters of general interest and importance to the various counties throughout the State, thereby enabling them to do the business in a more satisfactory manner, and at less expense to the counties. Some of them complained of the exhorbitant prices charged by publishers for road notices, etc.

The Commissioners of Norfolk County have decided to publish their annual statement of county affairs in but three papers in the county; instead of all papers, as has been the custom in former times; yet the county is free of debt, and its treasury is loaded with money waiting to fill the pockets of the office holders. We think if the poor country publishers, as a general thing, had one half as much pay for the labor they performed for the county, as the county officers, they could afford occasionally a turkey dinner.

It would cost the citizens of Quincy one mill each, if the receipts and expenditures for the County of Norfolk for 1883 were published in their town paper, and they had to pay the bill. Now, the question is, would not the citizens of Quincy and other towns, interested in their county affairs, rather pay ten times this amount and know where the county money is going? We think they would.

We believe that there is nothing worse for the town or county than to keep the tax-payers in ignorance of how the money is expended.

Polo at Brockton.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

Out of regard for the interests of Quincy, I earnestly desire to state a few facts concerning the game of polo played by the Quincys and Brocktons last Tuesday evening, in Brockton. In an article headed "Brockton shows Quincy how to play Polo," the Brockton Daily Enterprise publishes some very severe criticisms on the Quincys' prowess. A statement is made that the "Brockton boys beat the Quincy men." The true facts I will endeavor to set before the citizens of Quincy. The Quincy club, though not a long organized one, have shown to any careful observer that they possess more than average skill, and did they possess the advantages of some clubs, would bid fair to compete favorably with rivals. According to the Brockton account, the first goal was won by Quincy in nine minutes by a "lucky stroke" from Johnson. From the fact of the Brocktons being such skilled players, do not Johnson and his fellows deserve considerable credit for keeping the field for nine minutes, and then delivering that "lucky stroke?" The two goals following were scored by the Brocktons. The Enterprise states that at the fourth inning both sides were fagged, but when their boys saw the ball bounding towards them, they "threw off their tired look." No mention is made of the two "fouls" that the Brocktons made, which results from a decided lack of science, and had they made one more "foul" the goal would have been awarded to Quincy, and would have placed the opponents on an equality. After a hotly contested round of sixteen minutes, the Brocktons gained the goal. Hoping that the Quincys receive their much-deserved credit, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
FAIRNESS.

A New Diet in Milford.

About a year ago a horse belonging to Capt. W. P. Miller, became tender-footed, the result of overdriving. The hoofs came off, but new ones took their places, and Capt. Miller continued keeping him, hoping his feet would ultimately be all right again. But this not being the case, he finally concluded to dispatch the animal, and engaged Waldo Phipps to do the same. Aside from his tender feet, the animal was in excellent bodily health, and as sleek and fat as a seal. One day last week Phipps killed the animal, and the idea occurred to him that he would dress off a portion of it to show his friends. He did so, and took a "line" to his market. Several who saw it were anxious to test its gastronomical qualities, and Phipps accommodated them with generous steaks, which in several instances were taken home and broiled by the prudent housewife, she not knowing, however, the real nature of the dainty morsel. One audacious wretch assured his worthy spouse that it was a tenderloin from a "French Moose," and she declared it to be truly delicious. In every instance the equine steaks were pronounced magnificent eating, at least one noted epicure in town going into ecstasy over the ravishing joys to be wrested from "horse meat." The meat is of fine texture and inviting color, while the rich intermingling of "a streak of fat and a streak of lean" are well calculated to provoke epicurean favor. In Paris, as is well known, the consumption of horse flesh is enormous. Is Milford to become the Paris of America—on the dead horse question at least.—Milford Journal.

Riding on Sunday.

The Evening Star says, "There is a law on the statute books of Massachusetts which is a disgrace not only to the State, but to the civilization of the age,—the law which makes it a crime to travel on Sunday unless it be from necessity or charity.

"Of course the law is a dead letter, as the authorities never dream of enforcing it; but none the less the disgrace of it remains on the statute book. And worse than all, the judges are necessitated to give it practical recognition in an indirect way.

"For instance, if a poor mechanic, weary with his week's labor, concludes to give his family a little outing on Sunday, and to this end takes them out for a drive in the suburbs, he is of course violating the law in his innocent pursuit of healthful recreation. He is subject to a heavy fine, but as the law is never enforced, he is supposed to be correspondingly thankful for the immunity.

"But if a drunken rowdy should wilfully run into him, upset his vehicle and maim his wife and children for life, he can get no damages; for he is, like the rowdy, a violator of the law in committing the awful sin of driving out on the Lord's Day."

SUGAR. The sugar market has continued very dull since the commencement of the year, and prices have settled down to a lower point than for many years. Fair to good refining now ranges at wholesale from 5 7-8 to 6 cents per pound, but sales to any extent could not be made except at further concessions. It is doubtful if fair refining would bring over 5 3-4 cents, as refiners are now pretty well supplied, production has been curtailed and demand quite limited. In 1883 the the price of fair and good refining was from 6 7-8 to 7 cents, and in 1882 the price was 7 1-2 to 7 5-8 cents per pound. Refined sugars declined to 8 cents for granulated.—Boston Journal.

DEATHS IN BOSTON. The report of the mortality for the year 1883, shows a total of 9740 deaths against 8665 in 1882 and 9016 in 1881. The number of children who died under 5 years was 3437 in 1883 against 3150 in 1882. Alcoholism carried 67 victims to the grave in 1883, 94 in 1882 and 74 in 1881. The deaths from cholera infantum numbered 543 in 1883 and 506 in 1882. The deaths from diphtheria in 1883 numbered 445 as against 458 in 1882 and 601 in 1881. The deaths from measles show a large increase, there being 152 fatal cases in 1883, 25 in 1882 and 108 in 1881.

☞ People whose habit it is to harp upon the extravagance of our Government as compared with that of Great Britain would do well to make note of the striking fact that Great Britain employs 5965 officials, at a cost of about $10,000,000 yearly, to collect her internal revenue, while the United States employs only 4098 persons, at a cost of a little over $5,000,000 per annum to do the same thing, and our territory is thirty times larger than that of Great Britain besides.

☞ The number of years that a student has to spend in a medical institution before obtaining a degree is: In Sweden, 10; Norway, 8; Denmark, 7; Belgium, Holland, Italy and Switzerland, 6; Russia, Portugal, Austria and Hungary, 5; France, England and Canada, 4; United States, 3 or 2; Spain, 2.

☞ A Beacon street lady visited the chamber of her little son last Christmas eve, and found that her promising heir had pinned his stocking in a conspicuous place and had attached a little slip of paper bearing the suggestive words, "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

Odd Fellows.

It may be asked by some, why do we have weekly meetings, and why do we have secrets with the order? Why not come forward and do all openly before men? First, we must meet often to deliberate how we can best further on the cause of benevolence; in the multitude of counsellors there is strength. Having the business so frequently brought before us we are enabled to regulate it in the same way the merchant manages his business, and to use the best means in each case.

As to our secrets they are necessary to prevent our being imposed upon. Every person has had practical experience upon this subject. Let an illustration show what is meant. There comes to you pleading, a poor wreck of humanity, who pours into your listening ear a sad tale of opportunities lost, and of pinching poverty; you have a limited amount of money to distribute to just such cases, but you do not wish to bestow it upon unworthy persons, for if you do the really deserving will suffer, and you wish you had some infallible means to detect whether this person is telling you the truth, or not; if you had, you could be certain your bounty was rightly used. This same principle underlies the secrets of the Order. We adopt them in order that we may not be imposed upon by those who seek our aid. Oftentimes an appeal comes from those who journey from afar. Were it not for these things we could not tell whether we were aiding a friend or foe.

Remember, there is a vast difference between a secret society instituted for doing good, and one that is instituted for evil. They can only be known by their fruits. However those instituted for evil purposes are generally secret, in the full significance of the word, their very existence is probably unknown. Odd Fellowship does not show the light it courts in.

On the great question of right and wrong, Odd Fellowship, true to itself, can never be indifferent. It is no neutrality, not even an armed neutrality, but a force, on the folds of whose ample banner is inscribed "HUMANITY." Indeed, we war against vice in all its forms. There is no virtue that Odd Fellowship does not cherish; no vice against which it is not at enmity. But the weapons of our warfare are mild, merciful and kind. Our victories are not desolations; they are the victories of love over hate, of good over evil. They are conquests to the conquered, liberty to the captive, and life to the dead. Our mission is peace on earth, and good-will to men; our work is the reign of Love.

And I, with those who are endeavoring to start this good Order in Quincy, would invite the favor and active co-operation of all good men to join with us.

The statistics bear record to the wonderful growth of the Order. In the Sovereign Grand Secretary's report for the year 1882: grand lodges, 60; subordinate lodges, 7,803; lodge members, 510,414; total relief paid sick members and widows, and funeral expenses, $1,882,443.88.

Very respectfully yours,

JAMES H. BELL.

☞ Little round blue boxes with white paper linings stood in rows in the showcase of a lower Broadway fruit dealer Thursday, with five strawberries in each box. A sign read: "These boxes for 75 cents." Larger boxes, holding seventeen larger berries, were for sale at $3 each. The berries were all very large and beautiful.—New York Sun.

☞ The Foreign Exhibition in Boston, closed on Saturday last, having been opened about four months. Although it has been a grand success in many respects, it has not been financially, to its projectors. They are out from $25,000 to $50,000.

☞ Lager beer, which thirty years ago was practically unknown in this country, is now made by 2500 immense establishments, with over $100,000,000 of capital invested. The value of this production each year is over $200,000,000.

OBITUARY. Abram French, one of the oldest crockery dealers in Boston, died quite suddenly after a few weeks' illness, on Sunday last, at Jamaica Plains. Aged 69 years.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14, 1884.

In Congress the week was marked by the introduction of nearly fourteen hundred bills; important committee meetings and work; free trade orations in the Senate by Democratic Senators, notably one by Mr. Morgan of Alabama; anti-polygamy eloquence from Senator Cullom of Illinois, calling forth hearty congratulations from both sides of the chamber; debates in the House bearing on the Mississippi River improvement, which developed the views of a number of Congressmen on a question that has long attracted national attention; and the passage by the Senate of a bill for the immediate appropriation of one million dollars which the Mississippi River commission wants now, in order to secure the improvements in progress from destruction by freshets.

One important matter that is being prepared in committee for an early consideration of Congress, relates to banking and currency, and the subject is likely to call forth almost as much discussion as the appropriation bills and the revenue questions. However, Judge Buckner, of Mississippi, chairman of the House committee of banking and currency, says, he thinks the people of the United States practically agree on two things, namely: the gradual extinction of the public debt, and the retention of a paper currency of uniform value in every part of the country. Six years ago, nearly every member from the South offered a bill to repeal the tax of ten per cent. upon the circulation of State banks, and only one bill for that purpose has been presented in the present Congress, which fact Judge Buckner construes as a demonstration of the advantages of a paper currency of equal value everywhere.

In committee last Wednesday, plans were discussed for preventing a contraction of the national bank currency, and Messrs. Potter, Hunt, and Ermentrout, Democratic members, expressed themselves as decidedly in favor of such legislation, and as friends of the national banking system. The chairman refrains from predicting the action of the committee, but every member is said to be preparing a bill expressing his own ideas as to what must be done to meet the crisis which is approaching nearer with each reduction of the public debt. The committee first proposes to get all of the bids before it, and other necessary information, and then endeavor to agree upon some measure that will secure a paper currency of uniform value throughout the United States, after the debt has all been paid, and that will prevent undue contraction while it is being extinguished.

A national convention of commercial bodies will meet Wednesday in this city at Willard's Hall, to consider the question of a uniform system of bankruptcy. It will be attended by at least two hundred delegates, representing exchanges, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and mercantile associations in the most important commercial circles in the United States. The object is to present to the judiciary committee of the two Houses the formulated sentiment of the business men of the country with regard to a bankruptcy bill that will be equitable alike to the debtor and creditor classes. The framework of a bill has already been prepared, and it is proposed a committee, to be appointed at the meeting, shall present this for the consideration of Senator Edmunds and Representative Tucker, who are the chairmen respectively of the Senate and House judiciary committees. It is expected after a general interchange of views, that a bill can be prepared to meet the approval of both chairmen, and of all interests concerned. This measure will then be submitted to Congress, accompanied by an earnest appeal for its immediate consideration.

Another matter that demands early legislation is in regard to Indian affairs. Under existing treaties the tribes of the Northwest are intolerant of the rapid encroachments of civilization upon their reservations, through the advancement of railroads, and threaten to give serious trouble unless some satisfactory policy shall be settled upon without delay. The committee in charge of this grave problem confess themselves perplexed as to what measure will be expedient.

Several Indian tribes from New Mexico have been in Washington during the week, interviewing the Secretary of the Interior concerning the affairs of their agencies. Some of them wanted appropriations, others complained of fraudulent surveys, while others asked permission to change their reservation.

Last Wednesday afternoon while several Apache chiefs were visiting the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they were surrounded by a large number of female clerks, whose presence inspired one of the savages to say to the Commissioner in a manner, the sincerity of which could not be douted: "I will give you twenty-five good ponies for one of your squaws." Have You Ever Thought?

Did you ever well consider,
As you journey on life's way,
Of the vast results impendent
On the things you do and say?
Have you ever learned the magic Treasured in one little word,
Fitly spoken, wisely chosen,
How it into being stirred?

And a soul almost desponding,
New, fresh inspiration caught,
Grasped anew life's heavy burden,
By your bright example taught?
How a cold and icy nature,
Like a northern wintry blast,
Brings a blight where might be blossom,
Heaven's own blue is overcast?

Possibilities of greatness
May be crushed by ruthless hand?
Every aspiration withered,
Ere it ventures to expand?
And the grandeur of a lifetime
May be smothered in its bloom
For the lack of proper culture,
And a genial, sunny home.

Then don't call these trifling matters,
These small every-day affairs;
Words will eat as doth a canker,
Life at last hath many cares.
All our actions, words and manners,
With responsibilities are rife,
For in each a soul is hindered
Or advanced in higher life.

Farm and Garden.

Ensilage.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14, 1884.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

Having noticed in a recent number of the PATRIOT an announcement of the Ensilage Congress, which is to be held in this city on the 23d instant, and being somewhat familiar with the history of the discovery of ensilage as a means of preserving green crops, and of its development in this country, where it is fast coming into general use by enterprising farmers, and knowing how perfectly adapted it is to the needs of the farmers of your town, where the acreage of the general farm is limited, so that farmers cannot spare large lots of land for pasturage, I take the liberty of addressing your agricultural readers a few lines upon the subject, believing that it will be of interest to them.

Ensilage is a discovery of French origin, and was the outgrowth of a great variety of experiments which were made in attempts to preserve green corn-stalks and other fodder, it having been learned that such food was better relished by, as well as more nutritious to, the cattle if kept sometimes and allowed to partially ferment before feeding out. To this end various means were resorted to, such as stacking the corn and sweating it under covers, or packing it with salt in cellars, etc., etc., but the results were generally unsatisfactory, and often ruinous to the fodder.

To Monsieur Auguste Goffart, gentleman farmer in Burtin, France, belongs the honor of discovering, after, as he himself says, "thousands of experiments, continued not less than a quarter of a century," a method of preserving corn and other green crops in their own juices, and in such a manner that they would lose none of their nutritive quality or natural flavor, and so perfectly that the fodder could be kept throughout the year without deterioration.

He built large silos or pits walled up with masonry, into which corn, etc., having first been made into short lengths by a cutter, were stowed and trampled down. When the silos were full, covers were laid on and held down by weights placed upon them so as to produce a uniform and constant pressure.

M. Goffart's success attracted much attention in agricultural France, and in 1873 the French government awarded to him the Cross of the Legion of Honor for the discovery.

The large scale which he had in contemplation for the use of this method practically placed it beyond the reach of farmers, except in a large, co-operative way, and the honor of a more practical development of the system, so as to meet the wishes of the isolated American farmer, whom it is especially calculated to benefit, is due to the efforts of certain of our own countrymen, who engage in farming, not so much for the shekels it may bring them as for the recreation and scientific investigation it affords. And very fortunate, indeed, it is for the harder-working and more dependent tiller of the soil, though he so often fails to realize it, that there is such a class in this country, for many important discoveries and valuable inventions result from their investigations, and agriculture as an art is materially advanced thereby.

Francis Morris, Esq., of Oakland Manor, Maryland, was the first, in 1876, to build silos in this country, and by his extensive practical experiments upon his vast acres, as well as by his pen in newspaper discussion, brought the matter before American agriculturists. At first the subject was "pooh-poohed" by the farmers and derided by the agricultural press, but, like other great truths, it prevailed, and would not be laughed down, but steadily won its way into favor, so that in five years it had become a matter of so great importance that a Congress of farmers practically interested in the subject was convened at New York in 1882, under the auspices of the New York Plow Co., of which J. B. Brown, Esq., a gentleman widely and influentially known in agricultural circles, is president, and to whose indefatigable labor is largely due the growing popularity of ensilage. The object of this meeting was a "comparison of opinions and experiences in ensilage," and it was largely attended by practically interested farmers from a distance, and among whom were some of the foremost professional and business men of the country. Samples of milk and butter from ensilage was exhibited, and much new light diffused upon the subject, and a report of the Cogress was published, and widely circulated among farmers.

The experiments of the farmers who had "tried it for themselves" established the following, among other points:

1. That ensilage is a perfect and profitable method of preserving green crops of any kind, and practicable to the smallest of farmers and on the smallest scale.

2. That by the use of ensilage twice as much provender, and of twice as nutritious a quality, and far more palatable, can be produced on half as much land and with less labor, than where the old methods of curing is used.

I will close my letter by a quotation from the address of James B. Brown, Esq., delivered before the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture. He says:

"My own experience shows not only a larger (50 per cent.) profit, but that the system is adapted to the very smallest farmer. I have two cows on a piece of ground in New York city of four acres. A stony half acre was covered with drought-killed sod. It cost me ten dollars to get that half acre plowed by a neighboring contractor; one dollar more for a half bushel of the best kind of Southern seed corn. The rest of the work was done by the family horse and the gardener. The crop never saw a drop of rain, and before it made any ears it began to fade, like a consumptive girl, it grew whiter day by day. But the silo was ready. It was like a bin, single thick, not even matched second-hand one-inch boards, in the cellar beneath the stable; cost ten dollars. It will hold ten tons, but I only had half that amount. Dropped in from above, taken out from below. I was a week, purposely, in ensilaging that small crop; my two boys brought in the mowed stalks from the cutter in hand-carts, and trampled the silo each morning and night. It was cut one inch. It was very hot when the cover and twenty pounds to the square inch was put on, but it cooled off very quickly; in twenty-four hours could feel that boards were cool. Every one is astonished to see how the cut maize shrinks under pressure, as it gives up its elasticity. The effect upon the milking cow (ten months) was to increase two pounds a day, or ten per cent. It saved me two tons of hay, at twenty-dollars per ton." F. R. L.

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

Why the Indictment is Pressed.

The following is an extract from an address delivered by Hon. John B. Finch on October 12, 1882:—"There is no doubt about the aims of the temperance movement. The temperance men intend to destroy the drunkard-making system of America, root and branch. There is no such thing as compromise upon the issue. In the end, the liquor traffic of this country will abolish temperance, or temperance will abolish the liquor traffic. I would have you take the facts to your home, to your office, to your store or place of business, and when you are alone, and away from all exciting influences, sit down calmly and honestly, and, after having examined the liquor side of the question, and the temperance side of the question, make up your verdict in accordance with your honest judgment. If I should succeed in convincing you that I am right, if your judgment, reason, intelligence, tells you that I am right and then you refuse to work up to the full measure of your convictions, you are guilty of an injustice or cowardice of which I would not believe you capable. The whole question involved is simply a question of fact. If the dram-shop of this country is a blessing, if it makes honest voters, honest citizens, kind husbands and loving fathers; if it leads to an observance of the Christian Sabbath; if it leads to morality, manhood and intelligence; if it discourages crime, vice, pauperism, illegal voting and false swearing, then there are no two positions for you and me to take on the question. If the liquor traffic is a blessing, every patriotic American, every man who loves his country, owes it to his citizenship, to his own sense of honor, to stand by that traffic, talk for it, work for it, vote for it; if he is a praying man, pray for it."

Anecdotes.

"What's the matter with you, Pat? you lean forward like a man with a spinal complaint?"

"Och its nothin,' yer honor, ownly that I was compelled to borrow a shurt from me hunchbacked brother, an' its niver a soul can git the buldge out of it, so they can't."

Little Karl stood watching his mother, who was filling a lamp one morning with very clear oil. Suddenly the little fellow asked: "Is that water you are putting in the lamp, mamma?"

"Why, no, my child, water won't burn."

He quickly answered, "Hot water burns."

"Johnnie, did any one have the croup in your house last night?"

"Dunno; what made you ax me?"

"Well, I saw a light in the house long after midnight."

"Oh! that's my sister! She has something down in the parlor awful late every night, but I don't know whether it's the croup or not."

"Oh, yes," said the eldest Mrs. Culture at table d'hote the other evening, "I breakfasted yesterday with Mrs. Brainweight, and we enjoyed a delicious repast—excellent coffee, superior bread, and piscatorial globes done admirably."

"What?" asked her friend. "Piscatorial globes," repeated the Boston virgin. "And what under the sun are they?"

"I believe," said Miss Culture, drawing herself up stiffly, "I believe uncultured people call them fish balls."—Hotel Mail.

"Don't you think it a little inconsistant in a church member," said Parson Jones, to a wealthy parishioner, "for you to go out riding on the Sabbath?"

"No, indeed," replied the parishioner; "that is my way of saving 'soles,' you know."

Conundrums.

Why is beef suitable for a Christmas dinner? It is meat (meet) for rejoicing.

Why is sealing-wax like a soldier? It is often under arms.

Why are the assertions: "I sell apples," and "I sell no apples," alike? Because there is no difference.

Why is the letter C the noisest of letters? It begins all clamor.

Why is a dog's tail like the pith of a tree? It is farthest from the bark.

When is a baby not a baby? When it is a tea thing (teething).

Where can happiness always be found? In the dictionary.

☞ Norman McCleod tells of a rather gluttonous minister, who used to look at the dinner before saying grace, and if it was a good one began "Bountiful Jehovah," etc. If it looked bad, "We are not, O Lord, worthy of the least of Thy mercies."

Fashion Notes.

For the Patriot.

New York Fashions.

As a special benediction to a pretty neck, we find the low corsage revived once more, and as after a famine one looks for a feast, so now that Fashion permits it, there are a few pretty necks not on exhibition. A choice between the round and square low is given, but as the former requires positive perfection as to shoulders, the latter is seen most frequently. A cunning device, however, is that of filling in with tulle or gauze, and many a neck which would do anything but credit to the owner, when thus becomingly veiled yet half exhibited, takes on a transformation of adorableness. Adolphus, while worshipping that neck, sees the arms of his Divinity showing dimly likewise through gauzy veilings gotten up to match, and thus beclouded they doubtless likewise seem all that arms ought to be. A stout chaperone is likely to possess a prettier neck and arm than the debutante, but a frowning society might shrug its many shoulders if they were shown too plainly, so here again is an opportunity for coverings of gossamer, but fine lace, whether black or white, does frequent duty here, because less apt to give increase of amplitude. Many ball dresses have been made entirely of tulle or gauze, but striking combinations are produced by velvet, while a low velvet basque, with the remainder of diaphanous material, is greatly in favor.

HOLIDAY TOILETTES.

Mrs. William Astor wore at a holiday reception a dress of dark Titian red brocade and satin encircled with fine colored embroidery to match, the front skirt of satin gathered with deep cording and bows of ribbons half way across and bands of embroidery set on lengthwise. A gathered satin plastron on the high corsage, full brocaded train, brocaded paniers and elbow sleeves. Mrs. Paran Stevens, a costume of maroon velvet, the front and sides of rich, self-colored brocaded velvet cut in slopes at the lower end, and with a fringe of chenille loops falling over a plaiting of plain velvet. A plain velvet train; corsage high, with vest of satin plaited and prolonged to form panier draperies that meet the train. Miss Caroline Astor, pale pink repped silk, corsage with long pointed front and basque at the back. Sleeves plain to the elbow, and finished with lace and a garnet velvet rosette. The front and sides embroidered in garnet; embroidery to match in a narrow vest on the corsage; bouffant skirt drapery of repped silk, with panier sides, the lower edge trimmed with alternate flounces of white lace and silk. Mrs. Cyrus W. Field, a black velvet made with bouffant train, the front covered with deep black Spanish lace flounces, which is also inwrought with the folds of the train. Miss Catherine Wolfe, a dark blue velvet, with overdress of creamy lace and pearl embroidery, forming an exquisite tablier front.

JANUARY NOTES.

The fur cape is sometimes made with prolonged ends which upon occasion can be hooked backwards so as to form a muff. Orange color, while too pronounced to be very general, is often seen, and a reception dress worn by a protege of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, was made with an orange colored basque and overskirt with white Sicilienne petticoat. Some ladies who wish to display slender wrists continue ro wear a close-fitting glove. "Prayer rugs" are now fashionable presents; the devotee being supposed to kneel on a square in the centre. Sales of Horseford's Bread Preparation for the past year have been immense. Some of the most beautiful combinations as to color have been of pale green united with dark forest. White Surah and white cashmerse make a pretty evening toilette.

SOCIETY PERSONALS.

Miss Catherine Wolfe, who figures largely in New York and Newport society, is nearly related to the Lorilards, her mother having been a Miss Lorilard. She has received innumerable offers of marriage, but declines them all, possibly with the idea that her immense fortune may be a motive. She is a pillar of Grace Church, giving much to that very wealthy corporation, but a still greater amount in private charities. As an idea of how much is given in New York, I may add that Grace Church during the last year gave away at the rate of $2500 per week.

LUCY CARTER.

This and That.

☞ Some unknown person attempted to break into a Louisville editor's house recently, but discovered his mistake and escaped before the editor could rob him.

☞ When Fogg was asked regarding the latest additions to the English language, he said he would ask his wife. She always had the last word.

☞ This was the very concise verdict of a coroner's jury in Idaho: "We find that the deceased came to his death by calling Tom Watlings a liar."

☞ "Your daughter? Is it possible? Why, you look more like twin sisters." "No, I assure you, she is my only daughter," replied the pleased mother. And the polite old gentleman spoiled it all by remarking, "Well, she certainly looks old enough to be your sister."

☞ In this life are three things supremely difficult; to keep a secret, to forget an injury, and to make good use of leisure.

☞ A Troy lawyer asked a woman on the witness stand her age, and she promptly replied: "I sold milk for you to drink when a baby, and I haven't got my pay yet."

NO CURE! NO PAY.

DR. LAWRENCE'S COUGH BALSAM.

is warranted to cure COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, SORE THROAT, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

We do not claim to cure consumption when thoroughly seated, but we do claim that thousands of lives might be saved every year by the timely use of Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam.

Many people imagine they have consumption when in reality they only have a bad cold, which can easily be cured by proper care and the right kind of medicine. We could fill columns with testimonials, but do not believe in that way of advertising, our idea is to let everybody that is afflicted with a cough try for themselves, and is not perfectly satisfied, return the empty bottle of the dealer of whom it was bought and receive their money back.

Price for Trial Size, 25 Cents, Family Size, $1.00 per Bottle.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

To My Mother.

Long lines of shadowy cliffs, and mountains
Steep and high obscure the way. I cannot reach the Mountain's top, or pierce the frowning cliffs; cannot
Mount the eagle's wing, nor yet float with the morning
Air; cannot even catch one glimpse of the rippling brook,
Or the winding road through the valley's deep ravine
And over the hills. Oh, the long, long miles that Reaches out between you and I, my precious
Mother. Here the mighty cities of New England
Unfold the untold wealth of industry and Commerce. Here I look upon the ocean's broad
Expanse, whether in repose, where the tiny wavelets
Kiss the shore, or lashed in foaming fury,
Glorious, grand, beautiful; and yet to-night I
Close my eyes to all things else, as memory links
The past with the present hour, and in imagination,
And yet it seems so real, I'm standing by Your side, dearest mother. Snowy white your hair has Grown with added years. Youth no longer like a
Fairy queen hovers near. Eyes once sparkling
And bright have lost their lustre; lines are traced
On the once fair brow. And yet your face to me is More beautiful than the fairest could ever be.
I smooth your hair, and reverent shall the touch be;
Because, when the Sabbath eve is drawing to a
Close, and twilight has long since shaded around us,
I listen to your voice, so soft and low, and the Hour seems holy. I take your hands—hands not
Shapely, with tapering finger tips and snowy
Whiteness, but soiled and browned, in the time passed
For the work they did for me, when
Early childhood, brimming full of joyous fun,
Must have a mother's training, care and love.
Mother dear, for all your patient trial, your tenderest
Care, your sweet and comforting words, I never can Repay; but God is not unmindful, and when He Gathers home His jewels, my mother's reward shall Then be given.

Ah, softly as the snow-flakes fall
In fleecy folds of white,
An influence sweet steals in my heart.
'Tis mother's voice to-night.

With eyelids closed I listen still
To catch each whisper low,
For quiet joy and rest untold,
Dear mother, you bestow.

MAY LOVEJOY.

Miscellany.

Both Sides of the Question.

The Hollisters' parlor was certainly a very attractive spot. There were large easy-chairs, with arms outstretched as if in perpetual welcome; and wide lounges, with soft cushions that seemed to woo a weary mortal to luxurious repose. A few fine engravings hung upon the walls; and two or three hanging-cabinets and shelves contained some choice books, and sufficient china to please the eye with beauty of form and color, without giving the room the semblance of a curiosity shop. The open fire on the hearth, and the warm color of the table cover and window-draperies, added the finishing touches to this elegant bit of home comfort. Every time that Jack Hollister looked at his pleasant surroundings, he wondered how Bessie ever contrived to bring about such fine results at such little cost; for, although he had been admitted as partner in an old established firm, yet his interest was a small one, and he was obliged to practice the strictest economy.

It made a pretty picture to look upon; the dainty room; the fair-haired girlish wife, sitting on a low stool by the fire, bending over an account-book in her lap, and the tall, handsome husband, who was looking down on her with such undisguised admiration.

Suddenly the lady started, and rubbed the wrinkles out of her forehead. "Here, Jack, take this, please, and straighten it out for me." And she held up the account-book. "I've added it over four times, and I cannot make it come the same twice."

But Jack's hand was already searching his pocket for a cigar. "Can't you wait, Bessie, until I have had my smoke?"

"Please see to it now, Jack. It will only take a moment, and then we can have the rest of the evening all to ourselves."

"Very well." Jack bit off the end of his cigar, looked at it with longing eyes, and then reluctantly followed his wife to the centre-table.

"Be sure and look at all the items."

"Oh, never mind the items, they're all right."

Jack eyed his cigar wistfully; and then sitting down, ran his eyes rapidly over the pages before him. "Oranges!" he exclaimed, as he turned over a leaf. "Oranges again! They are well enough occasionally, but I wouldn't give the children too many."

Bessie said nothing, and Jack went on with his inspection. As he turned over the second leaf, he whistled softly. "Whew! Oranges again. If the children are going to eat oranges at this rate, I think it will be cheaper to start a grove down in Florida."

"They are not all for the children." I must plead guilty to eating a great many of them myself."

"That's quite a different matter. Well, eat all you please, my dear," and he turned over a third leaf.

"Goodness gracious, Bessie," he ejaculated. "Why, half the entries are oranges."

"Yes, I know," returned Bessie, meekly; "but to tell you the truth, I like oranges so well that I can't very well deny myself. It's a habit I got into when we were in Florida. I suppose you will think it dreadfully silly, Jack; but I really miss them if I don't have them every day."

"Why, Bessie, I thought you were a stronger-minded little woman than that. Eat oranges, my dear; but don't let the habit get the best of you."

"It's not so easy to give up the oranges,—it's like smoking, I guess. And she gave a quick glance at him from under her long, curling lashes.

Jack looked up from the book in amazement. "Here's a whole box of oranges!"

"Of course," returned Bessie, serenely—"to treat my friends. You know you have to keep a box of cigars for your friends."

"Oh!" responded Jack, faintly; then, after a moment's pause, he added: "This orange business is getting to be rather expensive, Bessie; five cents each—that's a high price for oranges, now. Down town the venders are hawking them about the streets."

"I suppose it is with Florida oranges as it is with Havana cigars—the high-priced ones have a peculiar flavor that is lacking in the cheaper kinds," replied Bessie, demurely. "However, I can get some of Messina fruit very cheap. I'll try, anyway."

"I don't want you to think that I'm stingy about the expenses—you know better than that, Bessie; but we've taken this house at a higher rent, and the outlay for the children is constantly increasing; and it is of the utmost importance that I should not draw any more out of the business than I can help. Morton Brothers have old fashioned notions. They have made their fortunes by saving and economy, and don't like the modern spend-as-you-go way. They have a very good opinion of me now. I don't want to lose it. I shall have a larger interest soon."

"Did the Morton brothers ever smoke?" queried Bessie, with the most beguiling ingenuousness.

"N-no. I can't say that they did. In fact, I know they didn't," stammered Jack. Then he adroitly changed the subject. "It's a small matter, to be sure,—but really, Bess, I can't bear to think you're such a slave to habit; break off, my dear."

"As I told you, Jack, it isn't so easy. It's harder to give up than smoking; for smoking hurts one, while oranges, you know, are especially recommended by physicians."

Jack looked up suddenly at his wife; but her face was a blank on which nothing could be read.

"My oranges do not come to more than your cigars, do they?" asked Bessie, with an air of the utmost solicitude.

"I believe not," said Jack, somewhat stiffly.

"Then it's all right," she replied joyfully. "Put up the accounts, Jack. I see that you are pining for your cigar. Let us go into the smoking-room."

Bessie led the way, humming a snatch of a gay song, and keeping step to the lively measure. As they reached the door of the smoking-room, she turned, and, clasping her hands, exclaimed joyfully:

"I have a surprise for you, Jack; I know you will be enchanted. It has taken me a long time to prepare it, and it has been very hard work. You'll think it a delightfully original idea. I only wonder that women haven't tried it before."

By the side of Jack's lounging-chair, stood Bessie's little wicker rocker, with its gay ribbons. She ran to the little plush framed mirror, and took from the pegs underneath two smoking-caps, one of which was Jack's own, and the other a coquettish little affair of light-blue cashmere and silver braid, which she jauntily perched on one side of her golden locks. Then, with a charmingly consequential air, she bustled around the room and took from the table drawer a box of cigarettes, struck a match, lighted a cigarette, placed it in her rosy mouth, and puffed away with all the ease and unconcern of a veteran smoker, while Jack stood by, speechless with indignation and surprise.

Then she took it out and held it between her slender thumb and forefinger and eyed it with the air of a connoisseur.

"I have been thinking for a long while how much more we wives might see of our husbands if we only smoked; for business leaves a man so few hours at home. And it has always seemed to me that it is a wife's solemn duty to make herself as companionable in every way for her husband as she possibly could. Now, how nice and cosy this is. Instead of sitting at my books, or sewing while you are smoking, we can smoke and chat together." Puff, puff, puff! and the blue smoke rolled upward, almost veiling Bessie's beautiful face from view. "You see, I have mastered the whole thing. I can do it all, except to put my feet in another chair. I haven't quite got the hang of that, yet. Perhaps in time I may be able to use a cigar, but this seems more delicate and ladylike, you know." Puff, puff, puff!

"It was fearfully hard work, continued Bessie, in a confidential tone, "the first time I tried it. I thought I should certainly die. It was the most unearthly sensation I ever experienced in my life; but I persevered, and I am just beginning to enjoy my accomplishment. But what's the matter? You don't look altogether pleased, Jack."

"No, I should say not," he replied, grimly, twisting his mustache into fierce little points.

"Have a light?" But before the words were well out of her mouth, Jack made a prodigious stride, and seizing her wrist in his rough grasp, shook the cigarette into the fire. "Bessie, if you wish me to respect you, never let me see you with one of these things again. It's unladylike—it's an abomination—it's—"

"But the papers said the Princess of Wales smoked cigarettes."

Jack made some irreverent remark about Her Royal Highness, and went on angrily:

"I believe you have lost your wits. I hope you women don't think we men smoke altogether for pleasure. It has a soothing effect on a man's nerves after the terrible push and drive of business."

"And don't my nerves need soothing, too?" inquired Bessie, with sweet simplicity. "I'm sure I have a daily fret and worry with the children, and the servant, and the trying to make a little money do the work of a great deal."

"But women's nerves are not subjected to such a strain as men's."

"But women's nerves are said not to be as strong as men's, and so they need a double portion of the soothing remedy. Look at both sides of the question; and, Jack, if it is a pitiable sight to see a weak woman the slave of any habit, how much more demoralizing to see men—the lords of creation—under such bondage?"

Jack looked keenly at his wife. "I can't for my life make it out," he said, "if this has been a piece of acting, for a purpose, or whether it is a reality. At all events, you have made a decided impression. Tell me truly, Bessie, would it make you any happier if I were to give up smoking? Would it, dear?"

Bessie lifted the cap from her head, and faced her husband solemnly. "Tell me truly, Jack; do you think you are any the better for smoking—in health, I mean?"

"No; and I suppose—if some of the doctors are to be believed—I am actually the worse for it. It is said to be a drain on one's physical bank account; and I know it to be a drain on the purse."

Jack straightened up, gave his cigar-case a loving pat, and laid it down on the mantel with a comical expression of regret. Here goes!" he said, suddenly; "no more smoking for me; I give the thing up."

Bessie placed the box of cigarettes beside it. "Oh, the nasty things! how I loathe them," she cried impulsively.

"Then it was acting, after all?" exclaimed Jack, a sudden light dawning upon him.

Bessie laughed, and nodded.

"What shall we call this little comedy?" asked Jack.

"Let us call it 'Both Sides of the Question,'" replied his wife.

How Bananas are Raised.

As everybody knows who has eaten a banana, the luscious fruit is seedless. The plants are propagated from other plants, so that the stock is not likely to run out. The plant requires for vigorous growth a deep, rich soil, abundantly watered. With these conditions present there is said to be no risk for a crop in hot regions, where alone the fruit is produced. Nine months after a cutting has been planted a purple bud appears in the centre of the unfolding leaves that shoots out from the head of the parent stem. The stem on which the bud appears grows rapidly above the main stalk. As the bud increases in weight the stem bends downward by a graceful curve, on the extremity of which the bud continues to grow still, the purple blossom falling off, little shoots appear as the embryo fruit. Each fruit has a yellow blossom at its outer extremity. At the end of three or four months the fruit has grown to maturity, and is picked long enough before it is "dead ripe," to preserve it in a marketable condition. From the roots of the parent stock other roots appear, which are trimmed out or left to grow, as the cultivator may deem best. A single stalk, therefore, bears only one bunch or crop as its life's work.

Spaniards have a religious reverence for the banana, believing it to be the fruit of which Adam partook.

The fruit has long been regarded as extremely nutritious. It is recommended above all others for invalids who are unable to swallow hard food. An estimate by Humbolt claims that 44,000 pounds of bananas can be produced on the soil that would be required for 1,000 pounds of potatoes, and that the area that would be required to raise wheat enough for one man would produce enough bananas to feed twenty-five men.

A Droll Fellow.

An interesting volume might be compiled from current anecdotes of hotels and hotel keepers. Almost every city has had its eccentric landlord, and he has had his peculiar guests. There was once a droll old fellow who kept a hotel at St. Albans, Vermont, years ago. One fine day he had his rooms renumbered, when he caused number 7 to be neatly painted on the back of the front door. After that, when a traveller came along whose looks he did not fancy, he would simply give the order to the porter: "show the gentleman to No. 7;" and the porter complying, the undesirable guest would find himself escorted to the front door. This was the same old citizen, by the way, who, when dunned by one of his regular boarders for the value of an overcoat stolen from the hotel, turned to his clerk and ordered: "Make out that man's bill right off; I'll be hanged if I'll clothe and board him both for five dollars a week!"

His Share.

"Well, old fellow, I hear that your grandmother is dead." "Yes," replied 'old fellow,' somewhat sadly, "she died yesterday." "It is the way of the world. We must all die sometime, and the old lady was well advanced in years. She left a last will and testament, of course? I have understood that she was very wealthy." "Oh, yes, she left a will and testament," still more sadly. "You were always a favorite of hers. Your name was mentioned, of course?" "Yes," he replied, and here the tears began to stream down his cheeks, "my name was mentioned. I am to have the testament."

☞ "There is danger in the electric wire," remarked the criminal when overtaken by a telegram.

Very Old but Very Good.

A Philadelphia book agent importuned James Watson, a rich and close New York man, living out at Elizabeth, until he bought a book—the "Early Christian Martyrs." Mr. Watson didn't want the book, but he bought it to get rid of the agent; then taking it under his arm he started for the train, which takes him to his New York office.

Mr. Watson hadn't been gone long before Mrs. Watson came home from a neighbor's. The book agent saw her and went in and persuaded the wife to buy another copy of the same book. She was ignorant of the fact that her husband has bought the same book in the morning. When Mr. Watson came back from New York at night Mrs. Watson showed him the book.

"I don't want to see it," said Watson, frowning terribly.

"Why, husband?" asked his wife.

"Because that rascally book agent sold me the same book this morning. Now we've got two copies of the same book—two copies of the 'Early Christian Martyrs,' and—"

"But, husband, we can—"

"No, we can't, either," interrupted Mr. Watson. "This man is off on the train before this. Confound it! I could kill the fellow. I—"

"Why, there he goes to the depot now," said Mrs. Watson, pointing out of the window at the retreating form of the book agent making for the train.

"But it's too late to catch him, and I'm not dressed. "I've taken off my boots, and—"

"Just then Mr. Stevens, a neighbor of Mr. Watson, drove by, when Mr. Watson pounded on the window pane in a frantic manner, almost frightening the horse.

"Here, Stevens!" he shouted, "You are hitched up! Won't you run your horse down to the train and hold that book agent till I come? Run! Catch 'im now!"

"All right," said Mr. Stevens, whipping up his horse and tearing down the road.

Mr. Stevens reached the train just as the conductor shouted "all aboard."

"Book agent!" he yelled, as the book agent stepped on to the train, "Book agent! hold on! Mr. Watson wants to see you."

"Watson? Watson wants to see me?" repeated the seemingly puzzled book agent. "Oh, I know what he wants; he wants to buy one of my books; but I can't miss the train to sell it to him."

"If that is all he wants, I can pay for it and take it back to him. How much is it?"

"Two dollars for the 'Early Christian Martyrs,'" said the book agent, as he reached for the money and passed the book out through the car window.

Just then Mr. Watson arrived, puffing and blowing, in his shirt sleeves. As he saw the train pull out he was too full for utterance.

"Well, I just got it for you," said Stevens; just got it and that's all."

"Got what?" yelled Watson.

"Why, I got the book—'Early Christian Martyrs,' and—"

"By—the—great—guns!" moaned Watson, as he placed his hand to his brow and swooned right in the middle of the street.

Knocking Down Car Fares.

In a talk with a reporter about devices to "beat" the bell-punch, a Chicago street railroad Superintendent recently took from his safe three "ringers." One was about the size of an English walnut, oval shaped, with a smooth surface, much resembling a walnut cut in half. It is made of brass and is "portable." It can be placed in the pocket or in the palm of the hand, and as the conductor makes a pass as if to ring the bell-punch, he can ring this with the other hand. "This is the most dangerous device," said he, "because it is the most difficult to detect, and is so easy to conceal and manipulate. We took this from a conductor last week. The conductor had been using it twelve days. A man brought a large number of these devices from New York, where they are manufactured. We know when he came, and, of course, he was watched. The conductor stole about $3 a day—ruined himself and lost a position for $36."

"Suppose he had taken $1 a day, or even less, could he have kept it up long?" asked the reporter.

"No. It is not by averaging receipts we detect," said the Superintendent. "We first find the culprit, and then by 'averaging up,' ascertain what he has taken;" and the Superintendent showed three reports from three inspectors made in the case of a certain conductor one afternoon. One report was that one fare was uncollected; another that three fares were collected and the punch not rung; and the other that the conductor went into a saloon to get beer. That man was discharged on Monday night. He evidently thought he was safe and would not run the risk of being caught with a swindling device about his person.

Another device for beating the punch was enclosed in a small sack to be put inside of the vest or under the coat, and the sack of course must be the color of the garment. The other was a simple tin box, something like a harmonicon, with a bell inside. "These are very simple," said the Superintendent, "and are made in Chicago. The bell is rung by pulling a button, which is generally the color of the conductor's coat or vest. All of these were taken from conductors within two weeks. It is not the amount they steal that leads to detection. It is the act. No matter how large or small the amount, we will find it out if they keep it up, and they do not have to keep it up very long, either."

Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria.

The numerous cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria which have recently been reported to our local Board of Health has led the Board to direct attention to the following circular of recommendations prepared by Dr. Durgain, chairman of the city of Boston:—

Scarlet fever is like smallpox in its power to spread rapidly from person to person; it is highly contagious. The disease shows its first symptoms in about one week after exposure, as a general rule, and persons who escape the illness during a fortnight after exposure may feel themselves safe from an attack.

Scarlet fever, scarlatina, canker rash and rash fever are names of one and the same dangerous disease.

When a case of scarlet fever occurs in any family, the sick person should be placed in a room apart from the other inmates of the house, and should be nursed, as far as possible, by one person only.

The sick chamber should be well warmed, exposed to the sunlight, and well aired; its furniture should be such as will permit of cleansing without injury, and all extra articles, such as window drapery, woolen carpets and the like, should be removed from the room during the sickness. The family should not mingle with other people. Visitors to the infected house should be warned of the presence of a dangerous disease therein, and children especially should not be admitted.

On recovery, the sick person should not mingle with others until all the roughness of the skin due to the disease shall have disappeared; a month is considered an average period during which isolation is needed. All clothing and bedding worn or used by the patient or the nurse should be cleansed by boiling for at least one hour; or, if that cannot be done, by free and prolonged exposure to outdoor air and sunlight. The walls of the room should be dry-rubbed, and the cloths used for the purpose should be burned without previous shaking. The ceiling should be scraped and whitened. The floor should be washed with soap and water, and carbolic acid may be added to the water (one pint to three or four gallons). The infected clothing should be cleansed by itself, and not sent to a laundry.

In case of death from scarlet fever, the funeral should be strictly private, and the corpse should not be exposed to view.

Because children are especially liable to take and to spread scarlet fever, and because schools afford a free opportunity for this, the School Committee excludes from school every child from any family in which a case of the disease occurs, the absence to continue four weeks from the beginning of an attack, and the scholar can only be readmitted to his schoolroom on the certificate of a physician that the required time has passed.

To Husbands.

Your wife is entitled to her share of your income. It is her income, as well as yours. John Stuart Mill was a cold-blooded philosopher, not a warm-blooded sentimentalist; John Stuart Mill says that the natural division of labor in a household, which assigns to the husband the earning of the money and to the wife the administration of the home, is an equable division of labor, giving to the two, ordinarily, about an equal share. To dole the money grudgingly to your wife is more than ungenerous; it is unjust. To dole it out at all is unjust. The treasury is a common treasury. You and she are, commercially speaking, partners. She has a right to a reasonable proportion of your income; to have it regularly; to have it without hesitation, reluctance or question; to spend it at her own discretion; and not to be called upon to account for each dollar before she receives another. We have received, lately, several letters on this subject, on behalf of wives subject to a petty and unintentional despotism by their husbands. Some of these letters one cannot read without a heartache, nor publish without the hazard of making the despotism worse.—Christian Union.

Where the Sun Jumps a Day.

Chatham Island, lying off the coast of New Zealand, in the Southern Pacific Ocean, is peculiarly situated, as it is one of the habited points of the globe where the day of the week changes. It is just in the line of demarkation between dates. The high 12 on Sunday or noon ceases and instantly Monday meridian begins. Sunday comes into a man's house on the east side and becomes Monday by the time it passes out the western door. A man sits down to his noonday dinner on Sunday, and it is Monday before he finishes it.

That Saturday is Sunday and Sunday is Monday, and Monday suddenly becomes transferred into Tuesday. It is a good place for people who have lost much time, for by taking an early start they can always get a day ahead on Chatham Island. It took philosophers and geographers a long time to settle the puzzle of where Sunday noon ceased and where Monday began, with a man traveling west fifteen degrees an hour, or with the sun. It is hoped that the next English Arctic expedition will settle the other mooted question: "Where will one stop who travels northwest continually?"

SATURDAY, JAN. 26, 1883.

Quincy Water Company.

This Company has so far completed its labors as to be able, the latter part of next week, to begin to supply certain portions of Quincy with water. Fourteen miles of pipe are laid, and ten miles are connected ready for use. Seventy-eight houses have service pipes connected, and we learn there are one hundred more houses from which applications for connections have been received.

Fires were started under the boilers several days since, and one pump of 2,000,000 gallons' capacity has been placed in position, ready to start the first of next week. It will take several days to rinse out the pipes and see that everything is in good working order before the Company will attempt to supply customers.

A stand-pipe, or reservoir, has been erected on Penn's Hill, at an elevation of 200 feet above tide level. It is sixty feet high, and thirty-five feet in diameter, and has a capacity of 430,000 gallons. It will give, the Company says, a head of 240 feet at the Town Hall, and 134 feet at the top of Wollaston Heights. The town has contracted with the Company for eighty-five hydrants at a cost of $2,950 per year. There will be force enough, it is believed, to throw water from the hydrants over any house in Quincy.

Some twenty-five prominent citizens of the town met at the Lyceum Room on Tuesday evening last to talk over the subject, and see if some steps could not be taken whereby a majority of the stock of the Company would be held by wealthy citizens of Quincy, instead of non-residents.

The meeting was called to order, and Mr. Charles A. Howland was chosen chairman, and Maj. William G. Sheen secretary. Quite an extended report was made of the Company's work, and the excellent prospects of the stock paying handsome dividends. Numerous citizens of Braintree and Weymouth are anxious to have the Quincy Company furnish them with water, and as the supply is believed to be abundant, steps will be taken soon to do so.

After a full discussion, a committee of five, composed of Everett C. Bumpus, John A. Gordon, William B. Rice, William A. Hodges and John Q. A. Field were chosen to examine fully into the financial status of the Company, and report at a future meeting.

Peck's Bad Boy.

A young man, who gave his name as George Harris, called at Mr. David B. Stetson's store, in Quincy, on Monday evening last, and said he would like to get some rubbers. After selecting a good pair of long rubber boots, a pair of overshoes and a pair of Congress boots, amounting to between seven and eight dollars, he said Mr. Faxon would pay for them. Being a stranger, he was informed by Mr. Stetson that he did not deliver goods on a verbal order, and the young man said he would go and get a written order. He was gone fifteen or twenty minutes, and returned with the following order, which we give our readers, verbatim:

Quincy, Jan. th21, 1884.

Mr. Stetson:

Pleas let this young man have what he Wishes and I Will call in and pay You In a day or too If he does not From Henry Faxom.

On receiving this order the goods, which were done up, were delivered to the rogue, and he departed. He had hardly left the store before the shopkeeper began to mistrust the order. The more he examined it, the more he felt all was not right; and it was taken to Mr. Henry H. Faxon, who said he had not given an order to anyone.

Officer Furnald was immediately notified, who began to make investigations, and on Wednesday morning the "bad boy" was brought into the court room. He plead guilty to a charge of obtaining goods under false pretences, and the case was continued one day to give the officer a chance to learn what had been the character of the young man in other places. As he had been recently married, and no bad reports were received from the place he formerly resided, the judge allowed him to depart on payment of $3 and costs.

Probably "Harris" would not have been permitted to depart so easily, but Mr. Stetson, learning that he was poor, had compassion on him, and believing this to be his first offence, worked in his behalf, and asked Judge Humphrey to be as lenient as possible.

Dreadful Disaster.

The fearful accident which befell the steamer City of Columbus, one of a line of passenger and freight steamers plying between Savannah and Boston, on Friday morning of last week, by running on a rock off Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard, has carried grief and sorrow to a great many homes. By this accident upwards of one hundred persons perished, a large number of whom were women and children.

The disaster happened near "devil's bridge," a submerged reef making out from Gay Head. The vessel struck on the rock in the early hour of the morning. The moon was shining, and the weather was clear. At the time of the accident a stiff breeze was blowing from a little south of west, and the light-house at Gay Head was clearly seen. The steamer was in charge of the second mate, who was among the lost, so that no statement from him can throw any light upon the mysterious event which has shrouded so many homes with gloom.

The revenue cutter Dexter, being in the vicinity, hurried to the rescue after the morning broke, and her boats, and life-boats from the shore, were instrumental in saving all who were rescued, and bringing off many of the dead bodies. Among the lost were Mrs. Beal and daughter, of Boston. This lady's husband was the son of the late Joseph Beal, of Quincy, and brother to Mrs. Elisha Packard, of this town.

On Thursday, divers made the discovery that the staterooms had been carried off, and nothing but the bare shell of the steamer remains. The diver also found the steamer lying by a large rock, which had unmistakable signs of having had a large piece split off from it by a terrible blow, the hole in the Columbus' stem corresponding to the projection of the rock; and part of her keel had also been carried off.

☞ Mr. A. G. Durgin has purchased of Mr. Albert Keating the estate of the late John W. Robie, on Chestnut street, for $3,500.

Brief Locals.

☞ Rob Roy.

☞ Rainy weather.

☞ Good sleighing first of the week.

☞ There is considerable sickness in town.

☞ The Universalists are making arrangements for their annual levee.

☞ We are pleased to see Dr. F. W. Penley out again after his recent sickness.

☞ Mrs. Esther Hunt, of Braintree, has our thanks for late Washington papers.

There was a dramatic entertainment, "Rob Roy," and a dance at the Town Hall, last evening, by Clan Mc Gregor.

☞ Madame Arcan's dancing school for young ladies and gentlemen closed last evening with a soiree at Faxon Hall.

☞ Miss Mabel G. French is home for a few weeks, having been with her sister at Brattleboro, Vt., several months.

☞ Among the graduates of the Bridgewater Normal School, on Wednesday, was Miss Nellie F. Kendall, of Atlantic.

☞ Mr. George Saville, who has been confined to the house for many weeks, is now able in good weather to be at his store.

☞ Mr. Joseph T. French, who received a severe fall a few weeks since, is out; but complains that his broken ribs and arm pain him considerably.

☞ Mr. J. Edward Spear, from Cincinnati, is visiting his friends for a few days in this vicinity. He arrived here on Thursday and was looking well.

☞ Mr. F. A. Bussell photographed the inside of Christ Church on Wednesday. This was done to show the handsome appearance of the church in its Christmas trimmings.

☞ Those persons desirous of having their children take lessons on the piano or organ, should read Miss Sawin's card on the next page. She is a very thorough teacher.

☞ We learn enough money has been subscribed toward the purchase of a clock for the Universalist steeple, but that it will not be placed in position before spring.

☞ A couple who had got into trouble were married at the District Court room on Monday morning, by E. Granville Pratt, Esq. They were not young but had each one or more children.

☞ The Myopia Club are still holding their pleasant assemblies at the skating-rink. On Thursday evening of next week they play at the Braintree Town Hall.

☞ We learn that Messrs. Tirrell & Sons, our excellent carriage manufacturers, have orders enough ahead to last them to next May, if no extra work is received.

☞ Mr. Joseph W. Robertson, who has been quite dangerously sick for some two weeks, with asthma and a slight touch of pneumonia, was able one day this week to step out on his piazza.

☞ Dr. William Everett, master of Adams Academy, took a violent cold, and has been confined to his residence since Saturday last. He is improving and it is hoped that he will be able to be out in a few days.

☞ Mrs. A. A. Claflin, of Quincy, made the opening address at the Woman Suffrage meeting in Boston, on Wednesday afternoon. She advocated organized effort and stated the need of money for the cause.

☞ Under the usual marriage head will be found that of Albert Crane, Esq., of New York City, son of the late Thomas Crane, founder of "The Thomas Crane Memorial Library," of Quincy.

☞ Mr. Herbert W. Spear of this town runs on "Gate City," the mate to the ill-fated steam-ship "City Columbus" on the Boston and Savannah line. His boat arrived safely in Boston, and on Thursday left for Savannah on her regular trip.

☞ Our citizens who have shirts, collars or cuffs that they wish to have laundered in an excellent manner at low prices, should send them to the news stand at the Old Colony depot. See notice on next page.

☞ Any of our citizens who are using hair oil, and wish for a good article, should call on Joseph S. Whall, druggist. It is prepared by him, and is excellent, as many of our citizens can testify.

☞ Mr. Edward Howe, a former principal of the Quincy High School, in 1865, died of blood poisoning at Jamaica Plain, Jan. 13th, aged 43 years. He leaves a widow and two children. Probably there are many of our citizens who remember him.

☞ Mr. Edward W. Souther and a companion, of the firm of Messrs. John H. Pray, Sons & Co., of Boston, left on Wednesday last for a delightful hunting expedition in Florida. Their baggage had been sent last week on the ill-fated steamer City of Columbus, so as to avoid the care and trouble of transferring it from one car to another. It was however washed ashore and they recovered their property.

Thanks. Mr. Chas. N. Richards of Washington, D. C., has our thanks for a neat business calender, with a few verses of New Year's Nights Thoughts.

Mr. Benjamin F. Curtis for Florida papers.

Mr. George W. Penniman of Western papers.

New Superintendent. The Selectmen have engaged Mr. John M. Fox, late superintendent of the Braintree almshouse, as superintendent of the Quincy Home, in place of Mr. George A. Ordway, resigned. Mr. Fox is said to be an excellent man for the place and comes highly recommended. He will enter on his duties February 1.

Guide to Boston. Messrs. Macullar, Parker & Co., proprietors of the princely clothing house in Boston, have published a neat little book with the above title. It contains an alphabetical list of names and places of interest in Boston. The information is given in a very concise form, and also gives the lines of horse cars to certain localities. It is quite valuable, as it can be carried in the pocket without inconvenience. Among its statistics are to be found the different holidays, the names of all the mayors to the present one, the branches of the public library, the post office stations, and much useful and interesting reading.

DEDICATION.

The Washington street Congregational Church which has been remodeled during the past four months is completed, and will be dedicated on Wednesday next, with appropriate services, during the afternoon and evening.

The entire work has been done at an expense of some $4,000. Messrs. Hayward Bros., of Braintree, the contractors, are receiving much praise for the thorough manner in which the work has been executed, transforming the building from the old-fashioned large auditory and cramped vestibule to a most convenient and modern building, well adapted to the needs of the society.

The dedicatory services on Wednesday will be conducted by Rev. Henry M. Dexter, D. D., of Boston, to commence at 2.30 o'clock; sermon by Rev. R. R. Meredith, of Boston. Evening exercises, which begin at 7.30 o'clock, will comprise addresses by Drs. Dexter, Welb, Coit and Herrick, of Boston, and Rev. Edward Norton of Quincy centre.

THIS AND THAT.

A supper was served in the vestry of the Baptist Church on Thursday night, and notwithstanding the unpleasantness of the weather, was fairly attended and much enjoyed.

A sociable on Wednesday evening in the vestry of Congregational Church was a very pleasant affair, and well attended.

Chicken-pox has attacked some of the little folks at the Neck.

The Vulture's ball was given on Thursday night at Faxon Hall, and a nice sum was netted, which is to be given to the charitable societies of Quincy.

We were electrified on Sunday and Tuesday, respectively, by the narration of startling tales, and were flattering ourselves that we should, for once, make a decided sensation in the Point column; but we were doomed to disappointment, for as the week waned very plausible explanations were given which extracted the blood curdling effect from either tale. This is the third time we have been thus disappointed, and the subject of each horror would have been a hair-breadth escape from a mad dog, a daring burglary and a brave girl, and lastly, a live skeleton discovered.

E. M. F.

Quincy House. Quincy has been for some months, since the closing of the Robertson House, without hotel accommodations in the centre of the town. Many of our citizens, therefore, will be pleased to learn that a public house will be opened next week, to be known as the Quincy House, by Col. George A. Ordway, for several years superintendent of the Quincy Home. Mr. Ordway has leased the whole of the building occupied by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Daniel F. French, on Temple street, and also the stables connected therewith, and will endeavor to give all patrons a cordial welcome. Having had twelve years of hotel experience in Boston and elsewhere, together with the charge of public institutions, he feels confident that he can give his patrons good satisfaction.

He will keep a public dining room, where any of our citizens can procure meals by the day or week, at reasonable prices. Hot coffee, oyster, etc., at all hours, but no intoxicating liquors. Many of our citizens, as well as strangers will find this place much to their advantage and pleasure, and if the enterprise of Mr. Ordway is a success, the building is to be raised one story, and otherwise enlarged and improved the coming summer. The house has been hastily opened without giving the necessary repairs needed, so as to give accommodations to the many boarders who have been stopping at Mrs. Menhinick, on Granite street, —her boarding house closing to-day.

Leap Year Party. Perhaps the most successful dance of the season, that is, financially, as well as for a good time, was that given at Faxon Hall on Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, and it reflects credit on the committee having charge of the same. It was a pleasant and social party, with good music and supper. In the sentiment on the order:—

"One year out of four,
While the gentlemen wait,
The ladies have the floor,
For their choice of first mate."

Robert Burns. In commemoration of the 125th birthday of Robert Burns, which occurred on the 25th inst., an appropriate discourse will be delivered in First Church by the pastor, the Rev. D. M. Wilson. His theme will be "The Religion of Robert Burns." The public are cordially invited. Service begins at 7 o'clock.

Sewerage. A hearing was had before a committee of the Legislature on Tuesday last, on the petition of John C. Randall and others of Quincy, for an act of incoporation for the purpose of constructing a system of sewerage in the town of Quincy. The hearing was continued to Wednesday, Feb. 6th. There was no opposition present, we learn, at the first meeting.

Weekly Payments. There is perhaps room for argument and an honest difference of opinion as to the advisability of a law compelling all employers to pay their help as often as once a week; but when it comes to the question of whether it would be well for workmen to receive their pay once a week, it seems to us there is little chance for argument against it. The man who has his week's pay in his hand, can do better for cash than for credit; and moreover the tendency would be altogether in the direction of encouraging cash business. Moreover, it a man engages to do so much work in a week for so much money, and fills his part of the contract, there would hardly seem to be any good reason why he should not have what he has earned when he has earned it.—Milford Journal.

The gem as perfected is very brilliant and beautiful, though it is not perfect in color, a marked yellowish tinge pervading it. The yellowish tinge disappears in artificial light.

The Committee on Charters, together with the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, visited Quincy on Tuesday evening last, to look over the field and to interview the scarlet degree members who have signed the petition for the granting to them of the charter originally held by the Mount Wollaston Lodge, No. 80, of this town. The distinguished guests were Samuel W. Hodges, the chairman of the committee, and who is also a Past Grand Master; Dr. Ambrose Lawrence, the Grand Representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and also a Past Grand Patriarch; Charles B. Newton, the Grand High Priest of the Grand Encampment of Massachusetts, and Charles D. Cole, the Grand Secretary. They were met at the Quincy depot on the arrival of the 6.25 train from Boston, by nearly all of the would-be charter Odd Fellows, and were first escorted to Wilson's new hall, on Hancock street, that they might give their opinions as to its suitableness. Thence all adjourned to the Lyceum Room, where Mr. D. Fred. French had spread a bountiful supper, and which all relished. Impromptu after-dinner speeches followed, in which all the Grand Officers took part, and also Messrs. Gill, Qualey and others of the petitioners. The remarks of all were encouraging, instructive and amusing, and from the tenor of those of the visitors, there can be but little, if any, doubt but what the old charter will come again to Quincy.

The petition, as given to the Committee on Charters, contained twenty-one names as charter members, and seventy-two as candidates, which is certainly very gratifying to those who have been active in the movement.

From the Grand Secretary we learn that the following were the last officers of the old Mount Wollaston Lodge: N. G.—Elisha French; V. G.—Lloyd Goodnow; Secretary—Wyman Abercrombie; Treasurer—Sumner W. Arnold.

From the proceedings of the Grand Lodge at its last annual session in August, 1883, which the Grand Secretary has kindly sent to us we learn that there are now 164 lodges in the State, with a total membership of 28,264, a net gain of 781 in the term ending last June.

It will be but a short time now before the Grand Lodge meets (a week from next Thursday) and then the charter will probably be granted, and two or three weeks thereafter the lodge will be instituted and its first officers installed.

Wollaston Items.

The "leap year" party has come and gone, and as "Newport" predicted, it was a grand success. The floor was under the management of Mrs. Brigham assisted by Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. Waterhouse, Mrs. Whittemore and Miss Cushman, and they carried out their part of the programme to the satisfaction of all. The orders were very fine, and the pleasing idea of having a young miss to hand to each gentleman a button-hole bouquet, was one of the attractions of the evening. The committee are deserving of a great deal of credit for their management, and all the ladies seemed to enjoy the privileges of leap year, and so it was not very "cold" for any one. The view from the "front seat" in the gallery was a very attractive one. Many of the ladies were richly attired, the music was all that could be desired, and another "jolly time" was heard from the lips of all.

Tuesday evening the K. and L. of Honor had their regular meeting, and with readings and songs the evening passed very pleasantly.

On the same evening Mr. Maynard, the blind pianist, gave a concert in Wollaston Hall, to a very large audience, and as all were so well pleased we trust that he and his friends will come again.

We have not been able as yet to find out what the K. of H. boys are up to in the shape of an entertainment, but as they always work with a will, and do not know the word "fail," we are very confident that they will be successful.

District Court, Quincy.

The following cases have been before the court this week:—

Sarah McCormick of Braintree, for vagrancy, was sent to the House of Correction for three months.

George F. Peck of Whalen, for obtaining goods under false pretenses. Fined $3 and costs.

Marcus M. Hall of South Weymouth, for defrauding Mrs. Rachel V. Loud of board. Plead guilty and case was continued to this Saturday morning.

Liquor seized from Peter Marque of Quincy, was ordered to be forfeited and the defendant to pay a fine of $3 and costs. He appealed.

☞ A concert will be tendered to Henry W. Stratton, a graduate of Perkins' Institution for the blind, at the Baptist Church, Neponset, Tuesday evening next, where a fine array of musical talent will be in attendance.

Take Notice. To those who are arranging for entertainments we would say that Mrs. H. T. Bates, of Boston, would be glad to be presented to a Quincy audience, and can give excellent recommendations from some of the best musical critics in Boston and elsewhere. W. A. Snow, commander of Post 148, G. A. R., says:

"We take pleasure in recommending Mrs. Hattie T. Bates as a soloist of remarkable power and brilliancy, capable of adding much to the enjoyment of any entertainment. She has appeared in a concert before our Post and gave universal satisfaction."

Her terms are reasonable, and her address is No. 8 Summer street, Boston.

☞ Digging out tarantulas has become an industry in Santa Barbara, Cal. The insects are suffocated with gas, and then stuffed and dried and fastened to a card. They sell at fifty cents each.

☞ A gold ring lost by Walter Murch of East Eddington, Maine, was found seven months afterward on a pig's tongue. The ring encircled the tongue 2 1-2 inches from the end, and fo course almost cut it in two.

Dr. James W. Sweet, of New Haven, has a letter in another column worth reading.

Miss Quincy.

Eliza Susan Quincy daughter of the late President Josiah Quincy, died on Thursday, Jan. 17. The life of this lady covers nearly eighty-six years, mostly in the present century. She was born on the 15tn of March, 1798, in the mansion of her grandmother, the widow of Josiah Quincy, 1st, of Revolutionary memory, which stood in Pearl street, Boston, and she passed away on the evneing of Jan. 17, 1884, from the ancestral home of her family in Quincy, in the room whence her great-grandfather, Josiah Quincy, departed on the 3d of March, 1784, a century having spanned the period between the two events. In Boston and Quincy the interests of Miss Quincy's life centred, including the episode of seventeen years' residence at Cambridge, while her father was president of Harvard College. Such a life may appear monotonous in the restless and changing currents of existence to-day, but Miss Quincy's experience was full and varied. Her intense interest in the historical past of her native New England, and of the family of which she was a member, her wonderfully retentive memory, her thorough knowledge of facts and dates, her indomitable perseverance and self-renouncing devotion as the principal assistant of her father in all of his work, literary and otherwise, made her career a marked one. During her father's long public life she was brought into contact with many remarkable people and had much experience of society as society was then constituted. Miss Quincy never came before the public as an authoress, but the large number of her private manuscripts, as well as various papers furnished to historical societies, might fill several volumes. In 1861 she edited the autobiography of her mother, Mrs. Eliza Susan Quincy (born Morton), which was printed for private circulation. Miss Quincy had also a large correspondence with many persons, among which were distinguished literary and scientific names, and her kindness and charity were yet more widely extended. A natural gift for drawing was early developed, and many proofs exist of her talent and tireless industry in that department of art. As the eldest child of her father's family she was the constant and trusted companion of her parents, and to the younger children a truly disinterested and affectionate sister. This tenderness of her nature extended itself to the young people of the succeeding generation. With her departs out of daily life one long known and well loved. She retained her vigorous intellect and unfailing memory to the last hour of her long life. That life in itself is a well-filled volume, without one line we can wish to blot; a fit record to be left on earth, and to "follow her up to joy and peace forever."

Historical.

On Sunday last the writer of this attended the services at the Baptist Church at Neponset. The preacher made some appropriate remarks with reference to the late disaster. I then remembered that it was just forty-four years ago, the day previous, that I heard in the same pulpit a sermon with reference to the terrible calamity that occurred a few days before,—the burning of the steamer Lexington on Long Island Sound. As in the late calamity, there was a large number of persons from Boston and vicinity. Out of 165 persons only four were saved. Among the lost was the lamented Dr. Charles Follen. He was a Unitarian minister, and had been a professor at Harvard College. He resided some time in Milton, and had preached occasionally at the Lower Mills Unitarian Church. He had been engaged in delivering a course of lectures in New York, and took passage on the Lexington to fill an engagement to preach a dedication sermon at the new Unitarian Church in Lexington, Mass. After all hopes of finding his remains had passed, arrangements were made in Boston to hold a memorial service to his memory. The late Rev. Samuel J. May, a Unitarian minister of high standing, and a warm friend of the deceased was selected to deliver the address.

Application was made to several of the Unitarian churches in Boston for permission to be used for this purpose; but this reasonable request was declined by all except the Rev. Dr. Channing. Permission for the use of the church was given by the committee, and on Sunday a notice of the meeting was announced from the pulpit. But Dr. Follen, had years previous, taken sides with the Garrison abolitionists, and the announcement from the pulpit of this meeting in their church in his memory produced a wonderful agitation. A meeting of the parish was held on Monday and the meeting-house was refused for this purpose, and the services were held in the Marlboro chapel. The late Edmund Quincy, formerly a member of Dr. Channing's Society, then wrote a most remarkable open letter addressed to the venerable pastor; it occupied two and a half columns of the Liberator. He said: "The standing committee were besieged on the following day by their grieved and outraged constituents. They demanded a redress of their grievances. The deep disgrace that hung over their beloved church must be averted, or they would never enter it again. If the threatened outrages were permitted to be perpetrated, padlocks or nails driven in a sure place should preserve, at least, a few of the pews from impending pollution." And further addressing the reverend Doctor, Mr. Quincy said: "Is such a state of feeling and opinion the harvest of your labors for nearly forty years in the vineyard of the Lord?"

At this distant day the remarks of Mr. Quincy may seem to some rather harsh, for Mr. Channing was present and took part in the memorial services. And we doubt if any person felt more disappointed and grieved at the action of his society than the reverend gentleman himself.

Neponset, Jan. 22, 1884.

☞ We learn from the Weymouth Gazette of last week, that Mr. George Sargent, an employe at the boot factory of T. A. Whicher & Co., in Quincy, narrowly escaped a most painful accident on the 15th inst., while adjusting some of the machinery, by which his arm was caught in the belt, and but for his own quick action and the presence of mind of a fellow-workman, he would have lost his arm. Fortunately he escaped with some bruises.

Marriages in 1883.

The following marriages were recorded by the Town Clerk of Quincy in 1883. In all there are ninety-five, being twenty-two less than the previous year. The youngest bride was but 15 years of age, the youngest groom only 20. The oldest bride was 61, the oldest groom 66. There were forty-two grooms between 20 and 25 years, and thirty-six brides between 15 and 21 years. The month of October was the most favorable for unions, the fatal number, 13, being yoked. July had the smallest number, only 3 unions being consummated. Rev. F. A. Friguglietti solemnized the largest number of these marriages,—12; Rev. Mr. Sawyer followed, his number being 9. The late lamented Father Kelley, who died the first week in September united 8 couples.

Afflicted. We are sorry to learn of the affliction that has occurred in Mr. E. E. Hall's family of late. Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Hall's mother, went to Taunton to visit some friends; was taken sick, and died quite suddenly, last week.

Mr. Hall has had a severe attack of erysipelas, and has been confined to the house for over a week.

Mr. Oscar Lane, who tended in the store, and who is a brother of Mrs. Hall, was also taken with the same disease, and has been very dangerously sick. The symptoms were more favorable for him yesterday.

A relative of Mr. Hall, from Maine, is now in his store on Washington street, while the sick are housed up.

Civil Service. The legislative committee on Public Service gave its first hearing at the State House on Tuesday last. Charles F. Adams, Jr., F. A. Claflin, and Josiah Quincy, Jr., of Quincy, were present and spoke in favor of a bill to improve and regulate civil service of the State and the cities of the Commonwealth.

Sleigh Rides. The County Clerk of Richmond, N. Y., is a handsome widower. A church fair was held in the town where Mr. Hart resides, and the manager had a fine Portland cutter presented them to dispose of by vote, and the handsome widower, to encourage the ladies, agreed to give every one who voted for him a ride in the new sleigh the first sleighing. Lady friends from all parts of Staten Island cast a ballot, and the County Clerk became the possessor of the sleigh. He found that he was mortgaged to the ladies for one hundred and eighty-six sleigh-rides. He has fulfilled part of his bargains, and will meet all demands if the snow only lasts long enough. Postal cards come by the dozen in every mail from ladies who claim their ride.

Immense. The growth of Texas is marvelous. The increase in her taxable property last year was $130,000,000. New counties to the number of 68 were organized, giving 200 in all. Besides this, there is a territory twice as large as the State of Georgia, not yet divided into counties.

☞ The Garfield memorial church, one of the finest church buildings in Washington, was dedicated January 20th, with an address by President Pendleton of Bethany College.

☞ The Atlantic House at Nantasket is being enlarged in preparation for increase of business next season. One hundred and fifty new rooms have been added, and the new dining hall is one hundred and thirty-one feet long by forty wide.

The snowstorms during the past five weeks have cost the street department of Boston $40,000.

County Matters.

QUINCY, Jan. 21, 1884.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

In your issue of the 19th inst. you imply that the County Commissioners of Norfolk County are trying to save money to line the pockets of office-holders by publishing their annual statement of receipts and expenditures of the County affairs in not more than three papers, instead of all the papers of the County, which would cost the tax-payers, you say, one mill each. If you will print section 27 and 28 of chapter 23 of the Public Statutes, which I will give below, it will show all fair-minded citizens that the County Commissioners of Norfolk County have no discretion in the matter, and that your redress is in some other direction.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN Q. A. FIELD.

SEC. 27. The County Treasurer and County Commissioners of each county, except Suffolk, shall, at the close of each year, publish in one or more newspapers, not exceeding three, printed in the same or an adjoining county, an account of the receipts and expenditures of their county, arranged under distinct heads, and a specific statement of the debts of the county, the purposes for which they were contracted, and the time when they become due.

SEC. 28. They shall also, at the close of each year, make a particular statement of the receipts and expenditures of their county, except cost of criminal prosecutions and expenses of courts, of which they shall make a general statement. The correctness of such statements shall be certified by the Board of Examiners, and, when so certified, the Treasurer shall cause them to be published in a form suitable for distribution, and in sufficient numbers to furnish a copy for every three hundred inhabitants of the County, and shall cause the same to be transmitted in proper proportions to the clerk of each city and town in the county.

In reply to Mr. Field, we would say that we think the County Commissioners do not use all the power they have to inform the citizens of the County of the receipts and expenditures. If they print the report for distribution (which we presume they do, as they wish us to believe they are a very law-abiding set of officers), they fail to give the masses of the voters any information when or where it can be procured. We believe if they wish to let the public know where the money goes, they have full power to do so, but as it is now, not one in a hundred knows that any statement has been published, or that it is for free distribution. We see nothing in the law, and we should be pleased to have any of the Commissioners point out any clause, that forbids them giving notice through every paper in the County, or by posting notices in prominent places in each town, that the annual statement of receipts and expenditures had been published, and where it could be found.

To publish the annual statement in three newspapers in a county of over 100,000 inhabitants is not a way to give the masses information on the subject. We think the County Commissioners know it, but they say it is law. Have they taken any steps to have the law changed?

Of some ten or fifteen newspapers in the south-western part of Norfolk County, not one is authorized to publish the statement this year. Is it using the voters of that section of the county right?

The Milford Journal one of the ablest and best edited country weeklies in the state, in reference to our article of last week, says:

"The PATRIOT'S criticisms are to the point, and we believe them to be just. There are always ample opportunities provided the people for paying their money into the public treasury; but the facilities offered them for an intelligent and convenient understanding of what has been done with their money, are comparatively meagre."

QUEER TOMB. In the ancient burying ground at East Boxford, this State, there is a curious tomb, which is visited by many people in the course of a year. This is the tomb of General Solomon Low, who was buried there in 1861, and who died at the age of seventy-nine years. It was designed by himself, and has on either side of the entrance two white marble grave-stones erected to the memory of his three wives, who are also interred there. On each stone are carved pictures of his wives. The first two are represented with their children around them and infants in their arms. They are sitting in antique chairs with straight backs. The two wives represented on the second stone are sitting in modern rocking-chairs beside a centre-table, on which are books. The fourth wife is still living. When the adjacent ground was used for a muster-field the tomb was always opened for one day, and the general's regimentals were exhibited there in accordance with the directions in the will.—Boston Journal.

☞ The Revere Beach and Lynn Railroad (narrow-gauge) has had its first set-back in the suit of James M. Shute, who sought to recover $10,000 for personal injuries received by the plaintiff by reason of falling over an embankment at the Pavilion station, Revere, upon the line of the defendant's road, not protected by a railing. A verdict of $4575 was given for the plaintiff.

☞ A grocery clerk, in Western Massachusetts, was greatly astonished and amused, recently, by a customer refusing to accept some canned tomatoes which she had ordered. As usual the box had a bright, gaudy label and the picture of a fox to show what brand it was. The woman looked at the can and refused to take it, for, as she said, "I haven't ordered any canned dog, and don't want any."

☞ A goose, belonging to A. S. Martyn, of Orange, died last week of old age, after having outlived three generations of the family to which it belonged. Its age was, without doubt, 100 years or over.

Washington Letter.

For the Patriot.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22, 1884.

The week's doings in Congress embrace, among important matters, the passage by the House of the Mississippi River appropriation bill of one million dollars, which, having passed the Senate last week, has now received the President's signature. The introduction of a large number of measures, and the passage of a bill for counting electoral votes by the Senate, which was well timed, now that the country is on the verge of another presidential election. Neither party has been willing to yield to the other the credit of settling this question, and so it has hung in dispute. Hope is now expressed that both will lay aside petty trifling in the matter, and agree on reforms which shall not reflect partizan theories, but a patriotic desire for the interests of the whole country. There was exhaustive argument in both Houses on the rights of the American hog in foreign markets, and propositions for a retaliatory policy in his behalf.

Behind closed doors the Senate lengthily discussed the ratification of the commercial treaty with Mexico, which failed when a vote was reached on Friday, at four o'clock, to get a two-thirds majority. Much interest was manifested to see how senators would vote on the question, as the tariff feature was the only one that met with serious objection. The differences of opinion, however, could not be traced on political, sectional, or economic lines. Senators of both parties, from every section, protectionists, free traders, and conservatives were found on both sides. Some opposed it on the ground that it would do no good, and might do harm by opening the way for extensive smuggling through Mexico. Others held that the chief gainers by the treaty, directly, would be the great trunk railroad lines, which are pushing down into Mexico, and seeking to build up a profitable trade between the two countries. The Senate also discussed the currency, public health, and temperance, the latter subject coming up in connection with the new code of Senate rules, which emphasized the prohibition of the sale of spirituous or malt liquors at the Capitol restaurants. The controversy was between Senators Fry and Bayard, and resulted in the exclusion of whiskey and the retention of beer.

The House discussed patent law, and passed a bill making all public roads and highways post routes. The most notable speeches made during the week were by Senator Hill of Colorado, favoring postal telegraphs and governmental control of telegraphy, and by Gen. Slocum of New York, for the relief of Fitz John Porter. The greatest interest was manifested to hear the argument in defence of the Porter Bill, and on Friday the floor of the House and galleries were crowded. Nearly every member was present, and few could be prevailed upon to leave the hall, in answer to petitions from the lobby, or to cards and letters sent in by friends. The appeal was touching and forcible, and, judging from its sympathetic reception upon the floor and in the galleries, there would seem to have been but one side to the question. When Gen. Slocum finished, many members rushed up to him and seized his hand. Mr. Steele, of Indiana followed in opposition to the bill. During the discussion of his case, Gen. Porter was a listener in the gallery.

Among other important movements during the week may be mentioned a joint Republican caucus, largely attended by senators and representatives, held in the hall of the House for the selection of a congressional campaign committee. "Stalwart" resolutions were adopted and steps immediately taken for immediate campaign work.

A national convention composed of delegates from nearly one hundred boards of trade and other commercial bodies of the United States met at Willard's Hall to devise and frame a uniform and equitable bankrupt law for presentation to Congress.

A committee of protectionists, consisting of thirty members, selected by the Industrial League, of New York City, have been appointed to lay siege to Congress on Wednesday in behalf of reviving American ship-building. It will wait upon the Ways and Means, Shipping, and Post Office and Post Roads committees of the House of Representatives, and the Finance and Commerce committees of the Senate. It will oppose all legislation in favor of free ships or free materials for ship-building, and advocates only such a policy as they think will revive American shipping in the foreign trade in vessels to be built, owned, manned and officered by American citizens.

In Memoriam.

Mr. William Q. Bosworth of Neponset, died at that place on the 16th inst., at the age of 24 years. He was buried from his mother's residence on Friday of last week. Services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Perkins of the Methodist Church, and the Weber Quartette rendered the following selections:—"Our Days are as the Grass," "Shall we meet beyond the River?" and "O, Where shall rest be Found?" Mr. Bosworth had been a book-keeper at Messrs. Macullar, Parker & Company's for seven years, and his associates at the store brought with them to the last scene an elegant and appropriate floral tribute to his memory. It was in the form of an open ledger, with a pen resting across one page. On the other page, which, like the first, was a compact bed of pure white pinks, were the words, "His Work is Done." The letters were composed of blue violets. Half opened rose-buds were grouped in the corners, and a deep border of pansies enclosed the whole. The book rested on a matting of ferns and evergreens, interwoven with sprays of smilax. A profusion of cut flowers accompanied this offering of friends who had known him so long and so well. Mr. Bosworth returned from the South last spring after a long rest from work, but without that assurance of firmer health that was so much desired by all. It soon became evident that his death was only a question of time. His last days were in keeping with the fine promise of his earlier life, and he finally passed away, peacefully and with due resignation, carrying with him to the "undiscovered bourne" the respect and esteem of employers and companions. His remains were taken to Warren, R. I., for burial.

Letter from New York City.

For the Patriot.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23, 1884.

A committee of six gentlemen, representing the 22d Assembly District of New York, appeared before Mayor Edson last Wednesday, with a petition for a new waterside street along the East River, to extend from Sixty-fourth to Ninety-first streets. The construction of a bulkhead, in connection with the new thoroughfare, was also asked, the petitioners urging that the interests of commerce demanded it, and that, at a small expense to the city, accommodations would be thus afforded to Sound steamers and ocean vessels, as well as great and needed facilities for dumping. The Mayor promised to carefully consider the project.

Welcome news to many publishers was the announcement by the Postmaster, last week, that the late order from the general Post-office Department, placing engravings, lithographs, Christmas and New Year's cards in the fourth class of mailing matter, had been abrogated, and that hereafter, as formerly, these articles would be rated as third class matter,—one cent for every two ounces. This repeal does not include labels, playing cards, wrapping paper, etc.

The Rev. Dr. Newman, pastor of the Madison Avenue Congregational Church, whose contest with a large faction, headed by Deacon Dr. Ranney, is just now exciting so much attention in this city and elsewhere, was tendered a reception in the Sunday-school room of his church last Tuesday evening. About five hundred of his friends were present, the majority of them being ladies. An excellent literary programme had been arranged, and this was successfully carried out. General Grant, who is a member of Dr. Newman's church and heads the ministerial party in the strife referred to, was represented by his son, U. S., Jr.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society, held in this city last Tuesday, it was voted to submit to the Republican and Democratic National Conventions a proposition to allow the presentation, by the N. T. Society, to the several states, of an amendment to the constitution, to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of all alcoholic liquors, for drinking purposes, in the United States, and that a President who will favor prohibition be nominated.

Last Monday evening the house of William Astor was the scene of the gayest festivity, being the occasion of Mrs. Astor's ball. Their spacious rooms were thronged with the cream of the highest circles, and many distinguished guests were present. The time passed so joyously that the small hours came on before the dancers were aware of its rapid flight. $175,000, it is said, represented the value of the solid silver service which was used at supper.

The first of this week there was a great deal of ice in the harbor, and its presence caused much inconvenience and delay to the ferry boats, especially to those plying between New York and Brooklyn. On Tuesday scarcely a boat on any of the various lines was able to enter its slip before backing out at least once, and in one instance the boat did not get within several feet of its pier, the passengers being obliged to climb by ladders over the piles to reach the shore. At times the ice fields were so large and thick that the boats sailed around them, on one or two occasions taking an hour or more for accomplishing what is ordinarily but a ten minute trip. The weather is now warmer and the boats have less difficulty in crossing.

The Associate Alumni of the College of the City of New York, held their annual dinner at Delmonico's early in the week. Many prominent and learned gentlemen were present, and toasts and speeches were in order. Professor Tisdall made the chief address of the evening, in which he plead for the agitation of public opinion on the subject of a more extended system of free education, claiming that New York does not pay as much in proportion to its wealth for free education as do the cities of Brooklyn and Boston. The hour of midnight ended the evening's enjoyment. W. L. M.

☞ The local paper is the best read paper in the world. All the city papers cannot supply the place of the home paper. No other contains the marriages and deaths, to say nothing of divorces and births; no other gives time for the next ball, picnic or political meeting; no other discusses the affairs of the town or county, or gives in detail the local news, which can be obtained from no other source. Everybody reads it, and that is why the unpretentious local paper is the best read paper in the world.—N. Y. Tribune.

FURNITURE. Paine is doing probably, the largest furniture business of any in New England, if not in America. Confined principally to manufacturing, finishing and selling their own products, and importations, they have but little competition. Their ware-rooms are very attractive; lighted through the day by electric lights. They sell for net cash, one price, wholesale or retail, believing that house-keeper's ready cash, as good as a dealer's. Fully 25 per cent. is saved by purchasing of them, and selecting from choice new styles and have everything warranted as represented. Entrances to ware-rooms, 141 Friend street, and 48 Canal street, opposite the Maine depot, Boston.

"What shall I ask in Prayer?"

"What shall I ask in prayer?"
Since God to me has given
The blessing of content while here,
And promised rest in heaven.

"What shall I ask in prayer?"
More strength His will to do,
More faith the narrow way to tread,
When clouds obstruct the view.

No clouds my faith can dim,
I know his love is there,
Yet as I kneel to him,
"What shall I ask in prayer?"

That friends I love may know
God's perfect, matchless love;
That they all things below
May leave for Christ above.

That they by trust in Him
This glorious love may share,
And ever sound His praise;
This would I ask in prayer.

ALDEN H. DAY.

Farm and Garden.

The Great Milk Convention.

What promises to be the largest meeting of farmers ever held in New England, and one that should lead to the most important results, is to be held at Horticultural Hall, corner of Bromfield and Tremont streets, Boston, on Tuesday, January 29, commencing at half past 10, A. M. It will be the annual meeting of the New England milk producers' association, which is to take the form of a grand mass convention of farmers and all interested in the production of milk for Boston market. It is hoped to arouse an interest among them that shall make the New England milk producers' association a power that can properly represent the farmers in the milk business—that shall assert the rights of producers, induce the co-operation of consumers, and command the respect of contractors. The idea is to make a strong central organization with men and funds to push its membership in every district where milk is made for market, and to form branch organizations in all the milk towns for this purpose.

The farmers of Orange County, N. Y., have successfully accomplished this in the face of far greater obstacles than beset our cause. W. P. Richardson, of Goshen, N. Y., president of the Farmers' milk company of that section, was and is the leading spirit in this movement. Major Henry E. Alvord, of Houghton Farm, Mountainville, N. Y., the famous dairy authority, who is so well and favorably known in New England, also took a leading part in the successful Orange County "milk war." Dr. H. A. Pooler, of the Board of Health of Goshen, N. Y., was also a prominent actor in this great struggle. All three of these men will address the meeting at Horticultural Hall. They will tell the means by which the Orange County farmers successfully united to withstand the exactions of unscrupulous New York city milk dealers. How these methods may be applied by Boston producers in dealing with the milk ring of Boston and in assisting to stop the alarming increase in the adulteration of milk, will be set forth clearly and forcibly. Secretary John E. Russell, of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, will also address the meeting and use his influence in promoting the farmers' just efforts. His excellency Gov. Robinson has been invited and will probably favor the convention with his presence.

Let every farmer and producer of milk for Boston market, or who is interested in the growth and prosperity of the dairy industry of southern New England, attend this meeting.

CROP PROSPECTS. The crop prospects for this year have been greatly improved by the late snow falls throughout the northern sections of the country. The amount of winter-killed wheat is likely to be smaller than usual; yet, without doubt, there will be some hitch or other to keep the price of flour at a high figure.

Anecdotes.

"Papa, I'm going to be an editor when I grow up."

"What put that idea into your head, my boy?"

"Well, I can always have lots of paste then to make kites with.

"How many donkeys have you in Austin, my little man?" asked a passenger on the south-bound train, protruding his head through the car window at the depot.

"O, we've got some few donkeys here in Austin, but most of them keep right on through to San Antonia." The stranger bumped the back of his head on the car window, and sank back in his seat.

"Good morning, children," said an Austin physician, as he met three or four little children on their way to school," "and how are you this morning?"

"We darsn't tell you," replied the oldest of the crowd, a boy of eight.

"Dare not tell me?" exclaimed the physician, "and why not?"

"Cause, papa said that last year it cost him over fifty dollars to have you come in and ask us how we were."

"I want to get a dog's muzzle," said a little fellow entering a hardware store. "Is it for your father?" asked the cautious storekeeper.

"No, of course it isn't," replied the little fellow indignantly, "it's for our dog."

The storekeeper has resolved to be more guarded in the future when he asks customers questions.

A widower who had married again arrived at Nice on his second wedding journey. "I remember you very well," said the hotel keeper, "but your wife has grown very thin."

"Yes."

"She was taller."

"Yes."

"And lighter complexion, was she not?"

"Yes. Besides, you know, it is not the same one."

"Ma, is Mr. Thompson respectable?"

"Certainly, my child. Why do you ask that question?"

"Because he wears such poor clothes."

"You should not judge persons by their clothes; none but silly people do that."

"Then everybody's silly—ain't they, ma?"

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

Legislative Report, 1867.

CONTINUED.

It may be taken to be the solemnly-declared judgment of the people of the Commonwealth that the principle of licensing the traffic in intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and thus giving legal sanction to that which is regarded in itself an evil, is no longer admissible in morals or in legislation. What ought not to be used as a beverage, ought not to be sold as such. What the good of the community requires us to expel, no man has a moral right to supply. That intemperance is dreadfully multiplied by the number of licensed shops for the retailing of spirits, we all know; and not only should the vending of spirits in these impure haunts be discouraged, but the vending of them by respectable men should be discouraged as a great public evil.

Household Receipts.

COFFEE CAKE. One cup of sugar, three-fourths of a cup of butter, one cup of coffee, two eggs, three cups of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half spoonful of saleratus, one teaspoonful of spices of all kinds, one cup of molasses.

PRESERVED APPLE SAUCE. Apple sauce ready for pies or the table, may be preserved by putting while hot into hot jars and sealing at once. Hot preserves should always be placed in hot jars, and cold fruit in cold jars. This often prevents fermenting.

APPLE POT-PIE. To make apple pot-pie, take fourteen apples, peeled, cored and sliced, one and a half pints of flour, one teaspoonful baking powder, one cupful sugar, half cupful butter, one cupful milk, large pinch of salt. Sift flour with powder and salt, rub in butter cold, add milk, mix into dough as for ten biscuits; with it line shallow stewpan to within two inches of bottom; pour in one and a half cupfuls of water, apples and sugar, wet edges and cover with rest of dough; put cover on, set it to boil twenty minutes, then place in moderate oven, until apples are cooked; then remove from oven, cut top crust in four equal parts, dish apples, lay on them pieces of side crust cut in diamonds, and pieces of top crust on a plate; serve with cream.

Fashion Notes.

The fichu bow, knot of flowers, or narrow lace pin is worn at one side of the neck by very young ladies.

The crape-finished border is a striking novelty in mourning note-paper, the imitation being wonderful.

Fancy muffs, or "finger cosies," as they are called, are made of the plumage of birds to match the bonnet.

A black velvet dog-collar, dotted with jewels, usually diamonds and pearls, is fashionable to wear with full dress toilets.

Yokes of transparent net are worn with low-necked black satin evening costumes.

The parasol of next season will be a bamboo frame covered with flowers—that is to say, it will be if fashionable Paris can make it so. Ordinary women should decide to content themselves with a rhubarb leaf or a burdock.

New fans, with neither flowers nor birds upon them are a novelty. They are ornamented with figures of Italian girls, their dresses and headgear, composed of satin, laid on Japanese fashion. A pool of water is represented by transparent gauze, and looks very natural.

It is asserted that the day of long gloves is coming to an end, and that those with four or five buttons will soon replace the loose wrinkled wrists to which the world has become accustomed.

The favorite travelling cloak this season is made of plaid tweed.

This and That.

☞ "What do you think of Fielding?" asked a Boston girl of a Harvard graduate. "Oh, it's important, of course, but it don't amount to anything without good batting.

☞ It is reported that an Indian woman of the Digger tribe, applied recently for a divorce because her husband insisted on taking a bath almost every year.

☞ It is very bad taste for a wife to growl at her husband for tracking mud into the house; for what is home without its mudder?

☞ A Michigan congressman told a friend he was filled with amazement; and the friend went down to the bar and called for amazement.

☞ Whatever our plans alloted to us by Providence, that for us is the post of duty. God estimates us not by the position we are in, but by the way in which we fill it.—Edwards.

☞ A young man violently in love with a pretty seamstress, being asked what business he was in, sighed deeply and said: "I am developing a sewing machine attachment."

☞ A five-year-old girl on Whiting street, troubled with a cold in her head, complained to her mother, "Oh, dear! my nose won't stay blew!"

☞ An exchange says that it makes a woman sick to keep a secret. That's why women always feel better after attending a sewing society.

Conundrums.

What color are the waves and winds? —The waves rose and the winds blew.

What trade never turns to the left? —The wheel-wright.

What is the best way to make hens lay?—Cut their heads off.

Why is a busy tailor seldom at home? —He is often cutting out.

Why is a gun like a jury?—It goes off when discharged.

Why is a rope-maker like a poet?—He makes lines.

Why are the boxes in a theatre like Niobe?—They are all in tiers (tears).

Why is a temperance hotel like the future home of the blest?—No bad spirits are permitted to enter it.

Mr. Astor's Wealth.

A late writer, speaking of the late John Jacob Astor, thus speaks of the mode by which he acquired his great wealth: "It was neither furs nor teas that gave him his $20,000,000. When he arrived in New York, it contained only 25,000 inhabitants. In 1809, when he had begun to have money to invest, the city had begun to double in population, and had advanced nearly a mile up the island. Astor foresaw the future growth, and bought all the lands and lots just beyond on the verge of the city that he could get. One little anecdote will show the wisdom of this proceeding. He sold a lot in the vicinity of Wall street, in 1810, for $8000, which was supposed to be somewhat under its value. The purchaser, after the papers were signed, seemed to chuckle over his bargain. "Why, Mr. Astor,' said he, 'this lot will be worth $12,000.' 'Very true,' replied Mr. Astor, "but now you shall see what I will do with this money. With $8,000 I will buy eighty lots above Canal street. By the time your lot is worth $12,000 my eighty lots will be worth $80,000,—which proved to be the fact. In the course of time the island was dotted all over with Astor land to such an extent that the whole income from his estate for fifty years could be invested in new houses, without buying any more land."

Aunt Lindy—Fo' de life o'me, chile, I cawn't 'magin' why yo'se so little."

Winnie—"Whad a' dicklus question. I was b'on little—dat's why. Yo' tinks I made myself, does yer?"

Dr. James W. Sweet, of No. 299 Water Street, New Haven, who has perhaps the largest practice in the country in reducing dislocations and fractures of bones, kindly gives us the following:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Aug. 14, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—I have suffered for the past three or four years with malaria in its different forms, especially chills and fever (intermittent). I have studied the subject carefully, and had arrived at the conclusion that quinine, in some of its forms, must be the only remedy, i. e., if quinine would not cure, one would have to stand it as best he could. My attention some three months ago was called to your "Red Jacket Bitters." I gave them a trial, and was happily surprised at the result. The malarial symptoms left me after a use of two bottles. I keep them in the house, however, and do not propose to entertain the symptoms a great while should they recur. I believe you may safely claim for your Bitters that they are a better remedy for malaria, or chills and fever, than has ever before invited the attention of the public.

Respectfully, &c.,

DR. JAMES W. SWEET.

Poetry.

The New Name.

What shall I call her when we meet?
She knew no other name on earth
Than which mothers find so sweet,
Though words be cold, and little worth;
"Our baby" seemed a name complete.

But now, so many years have flown
Since from my tearful gaze she passed,
How shall I, in the great unknown,
Amazed where all is strange and vast,
How shall I there reclaim my own?

What sweet, rare title does she bear?
For when I meet her on the shore,
Grown wise and great as she is fair,
"My baby," I can say no more,
For I shall be the infant there.

Miscellany.

Deaths in Quincy for 1883.

In the year 1883 there were two hundred and twenty-three deaths registered in Quincy, while in 1882 there were two hundred and seventeen, which was but a slight increase. The cause of twenty-three of these was consumption, and fourteen pneumonia, while scarlet fever, which was so prevalent throughout the town the past year, had but thirteen. Cancer and meningitis each had ten victims. Twenty-eight of these deaths were children between the ages of one year and five, while thirty-six were under one year. It will be seen that four had passed the advanced age of ninety.

THE RED JACKET.

We have received the Courier-Gazette, of Jan. 15th, a paper published in Rockland, Maine, which copies a lengthy and interesting article, from Harper's Magazine, on "the big event of ship-building in Rockland," and as Deacon George Thomas, now of Quincy Point, was the master-builder of the clipper ship Red Jacket we have been requested to give as much of the article as we could possibly spare room for in the PATRIOT.

In 1816 the famous Black Ball Line of packets began plying between New York and Liverpool. During the first nine years their average sailing time was twenty-three days, though one trip was made in 15 days, 18 hours. The first vessels of the line were of 800 or 900 tons, old measurement, or about the size of an average three-masted schooner of to-day. They were then considered very large. Other lines soon sprang up as rivals to the Black Ball, and the size of the ships increased, till in 1846 the "New World," 1400 tons, was the largest vessel afloat. In 1840 clipper ships began to be built, and the old packet service entered on a decline. The clipper ship was built expressly for speed, the growing business between this country and England demanding above all things quickness in passage. Added to this was the increasing demands of the China and India trade, and the discovery of gold in California and Australia. Fast ships alone could keep pace with the requirements of the hour. The first clipper ship was the "Rainbow," 750 tons. She was rapidly followed by others, ranging in size from 1000 to 2200 tons. Their career was brilliant beyond anything our merchant marine service ever had or has experienced.

Seacomb & Taylor, of Boston, a heavy firm of those times, contracted in 1853 with Deacon George Thomas of Rockland, to build a clipper ship of 2500 tons, which would make her the largest ship afloat. Mr. Thomas carried on business at the North-end, on the spot now occupied by the Ames ship-yard. He was one of the city's leading men. He was a highly successful builder, and his vessels were noted for their speed, beauty of finish and strength of build. Shortly after this time he removed to Quincy Point, Mass., and continued in this business for many years.

The "Red Jacket," as she was named, was ready for launching in the fall, and at 11 o'clock, A. M., Nov. 2, 1853, she slid into the sea. An immense crowd of spectators lined the shores to witness the launching of the leviathan. The fame of her building had traveled far, and large numbers were present from distant parts of the state to see the sight. It was the greatest event that had taken place in the history of a busy ship-building state. Business was generally suspended, public schools dismissed, and old and young flocked to the North-end.

The ship was launched without her masts in. As she moved slowly and gracefully into the water, the time-honored bottle being broken over the bow, cheer after cheer was sent up from the crowds on the bank and those on the vessel's deck."

The following is a description of the ship, as published in the Rockland Gazette at the time of her launching:

Length of keel, 234 ft.; breadth of beam, 44 ft., 6 in.; lower hold, 16 ft.; between decks, 8 ft.; length on deck, 255 ft. over all, making her tonnage 2500. Plank, hard pine, 5 in.; two streaks garboard, 7 in.; wales, 6 in.; one keelson, 18 in. square, white oak; two on top, 17 in. each, making 4 ft. 4 in.; sister keelsons, 15 in. square; bilge do., 16 in.; six bilge streaks, 12 by 14 in.; four do., 10 by 14; one do., 13 by 15; lower clamps, 8 in.; lower deck beams, 15 in. square; lower deck water-way streak, 16 in. sq.; two streaks on top, 10 by 15 in.; two on beam, 9 by 12; ceiling between decks, 6 in.; hanging knees, 12 in.; square fastened throughout; she has taken about 80 tons of iron, and is, of course, extra fastened. Her masts are: formast, 89 feet, mainmast 92 feet, mizzenmast 82 feet.

Her after cabin is 22 by 22 feet, veneered with rosewood, mahogany, satin, zebra, and black walnut, trimmed with gilt and finished in the highest style. It is connected by doors right and left of the centre with the forward cabin, which is of the same style of finish in pine, and is 27 by twelve feet; there are in the two cabins 14 large staterooms, besides those reserved for the officers, together with well-furnished and convenient offices, store-rooms, etc. Her forward house is 46 by 18 feet, and contains accommodations for 62 persons, with all the conveniences for cooking, ship's lockers, etc. She has amidships an iron water tank, 19 feet deep by 8 in diameter, which will hold about 6000 gallons. She has a massive, full figure head of the Indian chief whose name she bears, carved by Mason, of Boston; a light, round stern, the moulding on which is a bust of an Indian in the centre, with scroll work, 48 feet in length, very chastely executed by our townsman, S. L. Treat. She has two inch chains, with anchors to correspond.

She is a full clipper of the most perfect model. Her out-board and inboard finish fully corresponds with the perfect symmetry of her proportions and reflects great credit upon its contractor and superintendent, Z. Harlow Morse, who takes precedence as an A 1 ship-joiner. Her master-builder, Mr. George Thomas, has already so high a reputation as a ship-builder, that no praise from this quarter is needed.

This bit of description serves to show what in those days was the largest and "finest ship ever built in Maine." To-day the yards of our state turn out so many fine vessels that the Red Jacket would now excite no unusual comment. In 1853 she was the triumph of Maine ship-building.

One week from the time of her launching she was carried to New York where she received masts, spars, and rigging. By January all was complete and the ship set sail for Liverpool. There was great excitement over the event upon both sides of the ocean. The building of the vessel was well known, and the promise she gave of speed was to be verified. She was a beautiful craft in every respect, and old captains tell us that they never saw a handsomer sight than the Red Jacket presented under full sail. At this same time there was also being built in our city, by Horace Merriam, the clipper ship Live Yankee, 1638 tons, and she was launched shortly after the Red Jacket. Bets were freely laid as to which of these two clippers would beat in their first trip across the Atlantic—and far heavier wagers were made upon the ability of the Red Jacket to eclipse the brilliant records thus far made. Those of the present generation cannot begin to understand the deep interest taken in these marine matters in the days when clipper ships were the chief topic of conversation. The quickest time thus far made was 13 days, 19 hours, by the Sovereign of the Seas, built by Donald McKay, of East Boston.

The wildest hopes of the owners and builders of the Red Jacket were destined to be realized, the trip to Liverpool being made in 13 days, 1 hour, 24 minutes—the quickest time on record. The news was received in this country with the greatest excitement, and the newspapers bristled with display headings and exclamation points. It looked as if the speed of American clippers would never reach its limit.

The news of this remarkable passage reached Rockland on a Sunday, and was congratulated most heartily. The Live Yankee sailed shortly afterwards, but had a hard passage, and never succeeded in beating the record of her rival. Two other ships were built about this time after the Red Jacket's models—one at Wiscasset and one at Boston. But after Deacon Thomas had received his moulds he altered them, putting four extra frames into the vessel amidships, and in that respect she differed from her imitators, whose builders had thought to turn out vessels that should equal her in every respect. But the down East deacon was too smart for them.

The excitement in maritime circles in Liverpool over the affair was scarcely less than in New York. At least a day before the Red Jacket's arrival was expected by her most sanguine friends the American steamer, which had sailed only the day after the ship, arrived and announced the vessel as just behind her. In a few hours the Yankee clipper was sighted at the harbor's mouth.

She had been boarded at Point Linus by several hundred sailors. Two tugs had lines to her, but so great was her speed that they could not keep the lines taut. Every rag of canvas was drawing before a stiff nor'west wind and the vessel fairly flew. The harbor was alive with bunting. The Red Jacket kept grandly on her course, and essayed a feat not often attempted. It was usual for vessels to be laid in at the pierhead of the docks by aid of a tug. But the Red Jacket came about, threw her yards hard aback, and laid herself up to the pierhead with a skilfulness that won the plaudits of all who witnessed the masterly feat. In an instant by means of the big crew on board, her sails were furled. Our informant says that it is difficult to imagine a more beautiful scene than was presented by the ship from the time she hove in sight until her sails were furled as if by magic. The ship, with the assistance of the tugs was docked on the same tide.

The next year the ship Lightning was built by McKay, for an English firm, for the express purpose of beating the Red Jacket's record. It was afterwards claimed that this was done by a few hours, but American captains strongly dispute this claim.

The Red Jacket never returned to this country under an American flag. She was sold for $150,000 to the owners of an Australian packet line, and continued in that business for many years. Several changes were made in her construction, iron knees being substituted for wood, saloons and emigrant cabins made below, etc. In this latter change her cabins were removed, giving her a flush deck, and still further increasing the ship's beauty. She was kept in elegant condition, and as she made many more remarkable passages, she long remained a prominent figure among the shipping of the world. In August, 1854, she had a severe experience with icebergs off Cape Horn.

We doubt if more than two or three of the clipper ships, that from 1840 to 1855 made our marine history glorious, now ride the wave. Of this sorrowful few the Red Jacket is one, a fact which gives a peculiarly interesting finish to our article. She is now owned by H. Milvain, of Newcastle, England. The ship is reduced to the inglorious task of freighting lumber from Quebec to England. Alas, poor Yorick! It is a dull ending for a career that began so gloriously.

Mr. Thomas, who is now in his 89th year, is in good health and with but few infirmities of old age. He built a large ship of 2200 tons, called the Red Cloud, when 83 years old.

Photographing on Linen.

A photographer says: "There is this feature about photographing on linen: "You can wash and boil the work and it won't come out. There is some special interest shown among society people just now on this subject, because of some napkins used at the banquet given to Henry Irving, the actor, before he left London. His photograph was on each one, and of course it was intended as a souvenir for the guest to take away with him. The silk or cambric is printed from the negative. There will be a rage for it if it once gets started, and people will have photographs printed on their curtains and tidies, and in handkerchief corners. The face of a beautiful young lady on the corner of a gentleman's handkerchief would be much more attractive than a monogram or initial letter. It would be just the thing for hat linings and bands." The Detroit Free Press suggests that not the least of the advantages of such photographing would be that the wash would be promptly returned if the missing pieces were to haunt the wretched laundress with a vision of her customers.

Peculiarities of Language.

The German calls a thimble a "finger-hat," which it certainly is, and a grasshopper a "hay-horse." A glove with them is a "hand-shoe," showing evidently that they wore shoes before gloves. Poultry is "feather cattle," while the names for the well-known substances, "oxygen" and hydrogen," are in their language "sour stuff and "water stuff." The French, strange to say, have no verb "to stand," and cannot speak of "kicking" any one. The nearest approach, in his politeness, he makes to it, is to threaten to "give a blow with his foot"—the same thing probably to the recipient in either case, but it seems to want the directness, the energy of our "kick." Neither has he any word for "baby," nor for "home" nor "comfort." The term "upstairs" and "downstairs" are also unknown in French. The Hindoos are said to have no word for "friend." The Italians have no equivalent for "humanity."

Jay Gould's Tomb.

Jay Gould's tomb is almost finished. It is of ample size, being constructed to hold twenty bodies. It is elaborate in its workmanship and finish, and perfect in all its appointments. The illustrious millionaire biographer of himself is now prepared for anything that fate may bring. If he wants to stay at home he has houses, lands and money galore. If he wants to sail the seas he has a yacht ready at a moment's notice. And now if he wants to die at any time or any crazy person should blow him up with dynamite or powder he is ready with a tomb warranted to hold the most restless millionaire and to outwit the shrewdest and most industrious ghouls which New York can possibly furnish.—Philadelphia Times.

A Telephone Trick.

To a barrister's clerk in Birmingham, England, belongs the credit of showing how fraudulent ingenuity adapts itself to new conditions, and the robbery of his master through the telephone, for which he is now "wanted," was a very clever piece of criminal work. He connected the telephone with a friend of his employer, successfully imitated the voice of his master, and asked for the loan of some money, adding that the clerk would be sent to fetch it. Then, by forging a telegram to call the barrister into the country, he gained plenty of time to put long distances between the three parties concerned, and insured a postponement of the discovery of the fraud.

Household Economies.

Most women have some pet economy. With some instinct is directed toward the saving of pins; others like to hoard brown paper and pieces of twine. Many tremble at the idea of any waste in coal or light; the furnace fire is kept at a minimum and the gas is turned off on the smallest pretext. Some believe that thrift consists in spending no money except as necessity demands, while others regard any make shift, any living from hand to mouth, as the worst extravagance, and consider that real economy lies in having plenty of everything and using it with care. Contriving a meal out of nothing is the acme of satisfaction to many housekeepers, while others deny the possibility of such miracles.

A CURIOUS CASE. Dr. Kimball of Blackstone, whose death occurred a few weeks ago, was supposed to possess considerable wealth, although its place of deposit was a mystery. Years ago he became suspicious of banks, and withdrew his deposits. He owned no visible property, and lived a miserly life. At his death a bag containing nearly $11,000 in bills was found strapped to his body, and he had $1000 besides in his pockets. A large stuffed owl in his office was found to be filled with silver half-dollars. A huge hornet's nest that he had owned for years was also full of valuables. His whole wealth is estimated at from $70,000 to $80,000.

SATURDAY, FEB. 2, 1884.

Universalist Levee.

Another of those time-honored occasions, which has for nearly two score years attracted large audiences, will soon take place. It is announced for Wednesday evening, Feb. 13, as will be noticed by our advertising columns.

The committee on entertainment have secured the services of an excellent dramatic club, connected with the Universalist society in Hingham, who will present a very pleasing drama in two acts, and a mirthful, jolly farce. The music secured for the entertainment and dancing is Porter's band of Brockton, one of the best to be had, and one that is universally liked. The usual supply of good things to please the appetite will be found for sale. Those who wish to spend an evening pleasantly will find this one of the best that has been offered this season.

ATTEMPT AT ROBBERY. The Quincy depot, at the Old Colony Railroad station in this town, was broken into on Wednesday night last, but nothing of value was taken. It seems that the would-be robbers went to the company's tool-house, a few rods south of the depot, and succeeded in getting a large hammer and other tools, with which they managed to pry open the windows and get into the ticket office. When in they attempted to drill open the safe. They had succeeded in drilling a hole about half an inch in diameter, nearly an inch deep, and about four inches from the handle. They also broke the hinges on the safe. It is supposed that they got frightened before doing any further damage.

The station was locked about midnight by Officer Furnald, who went to his home. The baggage master, Mr. Hobart, went to the depot about five o'clock in the morning, to see to the fires, and was surprised to see a light burning in the room on approaching, and more alarm on entering to see the lamp on the floor and tools scattered about.

UNFORTUNATE. A gentleman from Dorchester called at Mr. Ordway's restaurant on Wednesday morning and said he had had a hard time of it. He left Boston on the last train for Harrison Square, and falling asleep did not discover his mishap until he arrived at Quincy Adams, where he got off. Being a stranger he tried without success to get lodging of some of our citizens, offering to pay a handsome price, but could find no one willing to accommodate him; fearing that he might be a robber or some desperado. He went to a livery stable but could not arouse the hostler; seeing a sleigh, he got in and covered himself with a robe, but it being cold he did not take any comfort. He called at Mr. Ordway's about 5 o'clock, and asked permission to get warmed by his stove, saying that he was half frozen. After getting comfortable and eating a good meal he went away happy. He gave the name of James Buckley.

ARRESTED. Detective N. B. Furnald arrested on Thursday evening, a man named Dennis Ford, of West Quincy, who is charged with the low, contemptible and annoying trick of spoiling ladies dresses and cloaks by following them and throwing some nasty liquid on their clothing, in many instances ruining some valuable garments. These annoying assaults have been continued for many months and numerous complaints have been made, but the officers have been unable to catch the villain. On Friday evening of last week, Miss Norah Corkery was passing along Hancock street, when she was assaulted in this manner by a man who was following her; she turned upon him when he ran and she pursued him for some distance, and recognized Dennis Ford, and making complaint he was arrested and brought before the District Court on Friday, but was held over to Tuesday next for trial.

ROB ROY. The representation of Rob Roy, under the auspices of Clan McGregor, last Friday, Burns' night, was a particularly successful affair. The hall was crowded to overflowing; in fact, many desiring admission were turned away. After the play had begun a delegation from Clan McKenzie of Boston, headed by two pipers, came proudly marching in. Fortunately their coming was anticipated, and seats reserved. A good orchestra was present, and before the play and between the scenes performed favorite Scotch airs. From the first scene it was apparent that the representation would be a success. The actors were well up in their parts, their positions were admirably chosen, and they spoke with clear and distinct utterance. To the very end all went smoothly and the interest was maintained. It would be invidious, where all did so excellently, to speak of the performance of individuals. But at least this can be said, that the acting of most was about as good as it could be, and very much better than was anticipated from amateurs then first acting together. There was no question about the dialect—it was the real broad thing. Some have suggested that the play be repeated. We should be glad to welcome a second performance.

COUNTY TREASURER'S REPORT. It will be noticed by an advertisement in our columns, that the Town Clerk has received forty copies of the "Receipts and Ependitures of the County of Norfolk; and if any of our citizens are desirous of knowing where and how the county money goes, they may be able to procure a copy gratis, if they call at once. The law says the County Treasurer shall send one for every three hundred inhabitants; and if he neglects to do it he is liable for violating the law; but it does not say anything against his furnishing more copies, if they are needed. If the County Commissioners and County Treasurer think they serve the best interest of the County by not letting the masses know how the money is expended, we think they labor under a mistake.

SHEET AND PILLOW CASE. Mr. Bryant Nightingale was agreeable surprised on Friday evening of last week by thirty or more of his young friends, who appeared in sheets and pillow cases. Games, dancing and other amusements were indulged in until about two A. M., when the surprisers departed for their homes, having enjoyed an evening long to be remembered.

ENJOYABLE TIME. Last Saturday evening the "Maid of Athens" with four horses took a party of twenty-five of our townspeople through the Weymouths to Hingham, where they had a hot supper, dancing, etc. Madam Arcan favored the party by banjo and piano playing, and Mr. J. B. Stetson entertained with some pleasing songs. The wonderful voice of Master Eddie Warren was appreciated by all the party.

A FINE ASSOCIATION. We have received the Directors' report of the Old Colony Beneficial Association, which makes a very fine showing. There are now 254 persons, of those employed by the Old Colony Railroad Co., who are members of this Association, sixty-one having joined the past year; and three have died. Amount paid in 1883 on account of death benefits was $1,340; for sickness, $1,015; and the Treasurer's report shows on hand $3,182.41.

PERSONAL. We take great pleasure in copying the following from the Boston Traveler of Jan. 29th:

"The friends of Hon. F. A. Hobart are strongly urging his merits as a candidate for the place on the Railroad Commission which will be made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Chadwick. He has been very warmly endorsed to Governor Robinson by a large number of the most influential citizens interested in maintaining the character and efficiency of this important commission. Mr. Hobart has a good business faculty, and, if appointed, would bring to the board a capacity for hard work, which would make him a valuable member of it. He may fairly be urged for the position, as he is, on his merits; yet, while in these days political considerations don't count, it is not forgotten by Republicans that for a quarter of a century Mr. Hobart has been a loyal and hard-working member of the party, who has rendered it much useful service."

DEDICATION.

On Wednesday the Washington street Congregational Church was dedicated, with appropriate services, held both afternoon and evening.

2.30 P. M.

Organ voluntary by Miss Lizzie W. Penney; opening prayer; anthem,—"Beautiful are Thy Towers,"—by the choir; prayer by Rev. Mr. Tyler of North Weymouth; hymn,—"Coronation. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Meridith, of Union Church, Boston. His text was taken from Isaiah 42d chapter, 4th verse: "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law." Dr. Meridith preached from this a most excellent sermon, which was listened to with rapt attention by the large congregation assembled. He commenced by saying that this prophecy pointed directly to the Messiah, fore telling his glorious triumphs as later exemplified by Christ's life and death. The sermon was divided into three heads, viz: first,—the operations; second,—the conditions; and third,—the difficulties through which he worked, by which rectitude was established. God, the Father, was shown both loving and just, and his death at last, for a principle, rather than a fact, thereby establishing abundant resources for the salvation of all. The services were concluded by doxology and benediction.

A collation was served in the vestry to visitors, and some eighty persons sat down to the bountifully spread tables and enjoyed a social time.

The hour before evening service was pleasantly passed in examining the building and noting the many improvements. The vestry is a model of convenience, containing a ladies' parlor, minister's room, kitchen, and a fine lecture room. The audience room is neatly and tastefully furnished.

7.30 P. M.

Anthem,—"Glory be to the Lord forever," by the choir; Scripture lesson read from 2d Chronicles, 6th chapter, by Rev. Mr. Chapin, of North Weymouth. Letters of regret were read from Rev. Dr. Dexter and other prominent clergymen, who were unable to attend. The opening address was made in an able manner by Rev. Dr. Coit of Boston. Rev. Mr. Chapin followed, in a congratulatory address.

Deacon T. Harris Newcomb, as chairman of the building committee, made a report of the work accomplished, showing that the committee had done its work in a manner reflecting great praise upon its members. He also spoke very highly of the work of Messrs. Hayward Bros., who contracted for the carpentry work, and who have done the same in a manner satisfactory to all. Rev. Mr. Norton, of Quincy centre, followed, in a pleasing address, which was much enjoyed. Rev. Mr. Harris, the pastor, then read a paper, presenting to the church an elegant pulpit and a beautiful communion table, which are the work of his own hands, the latter being a gift from Mrs. Harris. One of the firm of Shaw & Aplin, who came out to look at the same, was free to say that in mechanical execution, and also in fineness of finish, they far exceeded anything which they are called upon to make. Of these two gifts hardly too much can be said, and they will ever be prized by the recipients, who will hold in grateful remembrance one who has given both time and work so freely, as gifts to his people. To our pastor we are indebted in a great measure for the work which has been so successfully carried forward to completion.

The singing throughout the day was excellent, the regular choir being aided by a quartette from Braintree. The flowers were tastily arranged by Mrs. Penney. Services were closed by the anthem from the choir, "My House of Prayer," and the benediction.

THIS AND THAT.

Mr. O. M. Wait, at the Neck, has purchased the meat route owned by Mr. Rumbold, and will commence business to-day. Give him a trial.

One of the deacons happened to be in the church on Thursday, when he heard a carriage stop and some one try the door; on opening it, two gentlemen inquired at what hour the dedication services commenced; and on being told that they were a day late, felt so chagrined that they refused even to be shown over the building.

The Vulture Engine Company will hold its regular monthly meeting on Monday evening.

Some of the Vulture boys expected to have a collation the night after the ball, from cake and cream left over, and invited several to join them; but when the freezers were opened, they were found entirely empty, some of the day loafers having evidently been earlier. E. M. F.

Odd Fellows.

On Wednesday evening a preliminary meeting of the charter Odd Fellows was held at the Republican headquarters, about twenty being present. Charles B. Newton, of the Grand Lodge, was present, and explained very clearly the first steps in instituting lodges. The various committees reported progress. All are now looking forward to the semi-annual session of the Grand Lodge, to be held next Thursday.

Puritan Lodge, No. 179, of Braintree, had an initiation on Tuesday evening. It was the first work for the new officers, and was well performed. There were several visitors, including some from Quincy. An oyster supper was served after the meeting.

The Odd Fellows of Neponset have voted to build a new hall.

Two Odd Fellows of this town visited Winnisimmet Lodge, No. 24, of Chelsea, on Tuesday evening, and saw that lodge work the third degree on four candidates, and were much pleased. The lodge has recently formed a degree staff and purchased a regalia valued at $800, and is said to be one of the best working lodges in the state.

A LARGE BIBLE CLASS. Over 1500 persons attended the Sunday School Teachers' Bible Class in Tremont Temple, last Saturday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. R. R. Meredith. These meetings which are to be held every week and will be found very interesting to all Sunday school teachers and scholars.

ANNUAL BALL. The Old Colony R. R. Beneficial Association hold their annual ball in Odd Fellows Hall, Boston, next Friday evening. The music will be by the Boston Cadet Band.

Weymouth Items.

E. W. Hunt & Co., successors to the late Walter F. Hunt, are at present time doing a lively business at their factory, No. 65 Front street, in the manufacture of paper boxes, which they make of almost all sizes and descriptions. Yesterday morning was the first appearance of their new, large-framed wagon, capable of transporting large quantities of their production to Quincy, Brockton and other places, where they have large orders to fill.

By recent reports strangers would naturally think that the boot and shoe business was "booming" at the Landing, and at some of the factories the operatives were obliged to work nights in order to have goods sent to purchasers as quick as possible. At times some joking fellow may give, or pretend to give, valuable information to the unwary, which, after being made public, will deceive many. As far as I am acquainted, and by what I can learn from the manufacturers in this place, the business is very dull at the present time, and but slight encouragement for a lively spring trade.

Sunday evening, the Rev. B. F. Eaton, pastor of the Universalist Society, officiated at the memorial service given on the recent City of Columbus disaster. After organ voluntary and an appropriate hymn sung by the choir, he selected for his theme of remarks a portion of the twenty-third verse of the forty-ninth chapter of the book of Jeremiah: "For they have heard evil tidings; they are faint-hearted; there is sorrow on the sea." He was listened to by a large audience, with marked attention. By general request, Rev. Mr. Eaton will repeat, next Sunday morning, the sermon given on Sunday the 13th, the theme being "Where is Heaven."

By the recent lasters' strike at the factory of A. H. Sterling & Co., their bottoming is being sent to North Scituate. This act not only takes the work from this place, but weekly many hundreds of dollars; although strikes are the order of the day. F. H. T.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION. A mass convention in furtherance of the case of constitutional prohibition, is to be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, next Tuesday, and several prominent and able advocates will deliver addresses. In the call the committee say:

"The movement does not contemplate the organization of a new temperance society. The purpose is to use the machinery of existing temperance organizations and churches, and thereby unite all temperance forces against the common enemy. The enemies of the drink traffic, irrespective of party, church or organization, in the different wards and towns, are urged to call a meeting at once and elect not more than five delegates to attend the convention. This is a critical moment in the history of Massachusetts. Every friend of home and country should arrange to be present at the convention."

MRS. JAMES P. CALDWELL rode on a free pass the other day from Mexico, Mo., to Leadville, Col., to see her son. This pass was given to her husband and herself twenty years ago, and is a life pass over any railroad in the United States. It was given them by the North Missouri Railroad company, after they had respectfully declined the company's offer of a gift of $10,000. How the company happened to offer the couple—who were well-to-do in the world—a gift of $10,000 is told by the Hannibal Journal: In January, 1861, the Confederate bushwhackers set fire to the bridge over Young's creek, and Mr. Caldwell got out of bed in season to check the flames with a pail of water. Then he hurried to Centralia to give the alarm, leaving his wife and children to keep the fire in check. It was a bitter cold night, and Mrs. Caldwell had to wrap her children in blankets; but despite the cold they worked and extinguished the flames. The bridge, however, had been reduced to a mere shell. Mrs. Caldwell knew that it could not bear up a train that was almost due, and hurrying to her house, she got a lantern and stood on the bridge in the biting blasts of a January night, until that train, with its freight of human life had been warned and stopped.

SHODDY ARISTOCRACY. Among the many deceptions practiced by so-called society in New York, the following is perhaps one of the most barefaced: A lady entered the establishment of a large china and glass ware importer and selected a handsome set of dessert plates, to be sent home on approval. Each piece was ornamented with a hand-painted design, no two being alike, and they were valued at $100 per dozen. On the same evening, at the lady's Fifth avenue residence, the guests admired the dainty porcelain which held the fruit, but the next morning the set was returned to the store. The boy who called for the goods met a boy from another china establishment who had just had a large table ornament and an expensive candelabrum returned to him. The lady in question was of high social standing and supposed to be very wealthy. It is said that dealers in carpets, bronzes, works of art, and even milliners, are similarly imposed upon by persons who desire to make an elaborate display at little or no expense.

THANKS. C. C. Churchill, county treasurer, has our thanks for a copy of the "Receipts and Expenditures of the County of Norfolk for the year 1883." It shows the County free from debt, and $37,612.10 in the treasury. There were received from Quincy on account of dog licenses $792; a larger amount than was received from any other town in the county except Weymouth, which returned $856. Over $9000 was received from the various towns in the county; and after deducting the damages done by dogs, officers' fees, etc., amounting to $1001.30, the balance was returned to the towns.

☞ The American Bazar for February, just received, is a beautiful number, and fully justifies the claims of the publishers, that they are making "The Best and Cheapest Fashion Journal of the Day." In addition to its fashion departments, its literary features are of the highest order. Its subscription price, only $1.00 per annum, places it within the reach of all, and we also notice that in its premium list every subscriber is offered a choice from a catalogue of standard works by the best authors, free. Send 10 cents for a sample copy to the American Bazar Co., 202 Broadway, New York.

The snowstorms during the past five weeks have cost the street department of Boston $40,000.

Private Masquerade.

A complimentary masquerade ball was tendered the "old maids" at the Milton Town Hall, on Friday evening, Jan. 25th. Many of the costumes were both striking and effective. Much mirth was created by the well personated clowns. One of the novelties of the evening was a Chinese floor director, who remained incognito until unmasking. Barnum's fat boy enjoyed himself to the fullest extent of his good nature, while Folly proved himself highly entertaining. Among other characters the negro apple-woman was prominent, as also were Topsy and the little flower-girl. The Tourist Cattle-Driver, Charlie Ross, Cadet, Continental, Uncle Sam, Spanish Flower-girl, Luna, Pocahontas, Ancient Maiden, Peasant Girl, Roller Skater, and Grandmarm, were some of the leading characters. Refreshments were served in a most graceful and pleasing manner by the "old maids," during intermission. Every one thoroughly enjoyed the advantages of the evening, and it was pronounced by all a most decided success. All are anticipating another dance to be given by the "old maids" sometime in March. ### Lottery at Fairs.

Our townsman, Everett C. Bumpus, Esq., District Attorney for the Southeastern District, has sent the following letter to the district police officers of Norfolk and Plymouth Counties:—

BOSTON, Jan. 28, 1884.

Dear Sir: Many complaints having been made to me that the law concerning lotteries is almost daily violated in our district, particularly at fairs and other public gatherings, I beg leave to call your attention to the same, and request that you take all necessary steps to prevent further violation of this law in our district. Yours truly,

E. C. BUMPUS.

☞ The Milford Journal says "the Legislature says by a vote of 44 yeas to 119 nays that two or more adjoining towns cannot unite in the employment of a school superintendent. We have never believed in this system of school superintendence, for under it petty jealousies would be very likely to spring up between the towns, and charges of favoritism and partiality would be almost certain to prevail."

☞ Mr. L. Lum Smith informs the public that he has changed the name of the Agents Herald to the Public Herald. This is a valuable monthly paper published at Philadelphia, which devotes considerable space in exposing frauds. It has been published eight years with good success.

VALUABLE PATENT. The value of the telephone patent is enormous, and we very much doubt if it could now be purchased for $25,000,000. It is probably by far the most valuable single patent which has ever been issued. —The Electrician.

POSTPONED. The investigation into the causes of the disaster to the City of Columbus, which was to have commenced in Boston, last Wednesday, has been postponed until Tuesday morning next, owing to the illness of Captain Wright.

☞ Frederick Douglass was married on Thursday, of last week at his Washington home, to Miss Helen F. Fitts of Avon, New York, a white woman, thirty-three years of age. The bridegroom is sixty-seven.

☞ A Mr. Goodebham of Toronto, Canada, has given a million dollars to found a Methodist college at Toronto.

Wollaston Items.

A few years ago, so "Newport" has been informed, the leading topic of conversation in this section was the need of a village Improvement Society, and the citizens at that time were very enthusiastic over the idea of taking some concerted action towards making the village more attractive. At a meeting called for the purpose of discussing the plans and aims of such a society, a well-known resident made the following remarks: "I look with pride upon that noble tree standing near my residence, and whether it was placed there by the hand of man, or came by the law of Nature, I know I am ever grateful for it, and if this society should do nothing else than to encourage the setting out of trees along our streets, it will perform a noble duty, and in after years will receive words of praise from those who are to come after us."

At this meeting a committee was appointed to nominate officers for the society, but for some unknown reason, the committee failed to report, and further meetings were postponed. We, of the present day, may well regret that the citizens allowed the subject to go by default, for by this time the practical results that would have followed through the influence of such a society, would be as manifest with us to-day, as in other places where active measures were taken.

In towns where these Village Improvement societies flourish, we know their monthly meetings are not only very pleasant but very instructive. Every member can profit by the experience of others, for naturally, all the subjects of interest to those who live in the country would come before these gatherings for discussion.

A great deal of credit is due to those who have taken so much pride in making their own estates so attractive, but cannot something be done by us all by contributing a little for the good of the whole, if only in the direction of setting out more trees along our public streets.

The K. of H. will hold their regular session on Monday evening, Feb. 4th, and no doubt the Dictator would be pleased to see a large attendance, as a subject of much importance to the order may come up for discussion. We understand that the meeting nights are now on the first and third Mondays of each month.

The first of the second course of dances takes place in Wollaston Hall, on Friday evening, Feb. 1st, and as the first course was so enjoyable, all are looking forward to a repetition of the "jolly times."

The Oratorio chorus will probably give another of their fine concerts very soon in Wollaston Hall.

The K. of H. boys are keeping very quiet in regard to their proposed entertainment, but no doubt the particulars will soon be made public.

The friendly criticisms bestowed upon these little articles have, however, been made very public, and for the same please accept the thanks of

NEWPORT.

FREE EXHIBITION. Mr. J. M. Hill takes pleasure in announcing that he has taken the Horticultural Hall, in Boston, and has placed upon free exhibition there, Miss Margaret Mather's famous oil paintings, "Francesa da Rimini" and "The Death of Juliet." The large hall has been appropriately draped and lighted, and the paintings unveiled for the free inspection of the public during Miss Mather's Boston engagement, beginning at the Boston Theatre, Monday, February 4th, and continuing three weeks.

In the large cities where these works previously exhibited, the average daily attendance has been over 5000, and connoisseurs in matters of fine art have uttered the strongest praise in their behalf.

Philanthrophist Faxon.

During the time that Mr. Henry H. Faxon has served the town of Quincy as a special police officer to enforce the liquor laws, there have been many inquiries made as to whether he was intending at any time to charge the town for his services. To set the matter at rest Mr. Faxon has sent the following letter to the Selectmen.

"To the Honorable Board of Selectmen—Gentlemen: For several years I have served the town as policeman, specially appointed to enforce the laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors. Appropriations have been made each year to pay for such duties. In order to relieve the town of any embarrassment as regards my compensation, I will state that I have made no charge whatever. I did not accept the position, with its many perplexities, for a money consideration, but for a higher reward—that of benefiting the citizens in their business and social relations. I have also derived the satisfaction of knowing that the laws of prohibition can be carried out if officials are honest and earnest. Confident that my fellow townsmen have fully realized the blessings resulting from the enforcement of the law, I trust that in the coming campaign they will not be indifferent in advancing every principle which pertains to good government. Yours truly,

HENRY H. FAXON.

Quincy, Jan. 28, 1884.

Mr. Faxon said that thus far he had contributed to the cause of prosecuting illegal liquor selling in Quincy about $5000 in money, in addition to unremitting toil and attention to the prosecution of cases. He has paid all his own counsel fees, and, whenever he has been assisted by brother officers, has invariably compensated them for special duties performed. He wanted to try the experiment, and being perfectly satisfied with the result, is willing to bear the expense.

SUCCESSION TO THE PRESIDENCY. The U. S. Senate last week passed Senator Hoar's bill providing for the succession of the Presidency of the United States, in case of death or disability. It delegates immediate authority to the first available member of the Cabinet, reckoning according to the established rank of the several secretaries. The present law would make the President of the Senate succeed Mr. Arthur, and a member of the Cabinet might better carry on the policy of the Administration. The bill provides for the assembling of Congress within twenty days and a new election by the people without delay. This is an important measure, but does not equal, in the need of action at this session, the bill to regulate the electoral count, also in charge of Mr. Hoar, and passed the other day by the Senate. There is supposed to be a scheme to throw the next election into Congress, and the need of a more exact rule for counting the votes of the states is imparative.

Dining room tables and chairs, new styles in chamber and parlor suites have just been added, also a number of new styles in book cases are now being finished. Everything made and finished by him is warranted to be as represented and to give perfect satisfaction or money returned. One entrance is on Canal street, number 48, opposite Maine depot.

Letter from Auburn.

AUBURN, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1884.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

As I am feeling somewhat inclined to be PATRIOT-ic, I will, with your permission, allow my thoughts to flow in that direction. There is an old saying, and one, perhaps, that is worthy of much consideration, that "distance lends enchantment." If this be true of the sense of sight, why not of the sense of hearing? And if true of hearing, I beg leave to hold the attention of those who peruse your valuable paper, and I will strive to make them hear some things that have come under my observation, in this city of hotels and electric lights.

Auburn has a population of 25,000, and they are from every clime and of every color. A large per centage of the people are very industrious; not from choice, for they are rational; but from the force of circumstances. Now that force spoken of never brought men into a better place, for I have yet to find any place where business is so permanent. The population, unlike that of Massachusetts' small cities, is mostly of German extract. The city is situated on rising ground, between the beautiful Mohawk valley on the east, and the Genesee valley on the west. Two miles south of the city is Owasco lake, sixteen miles long by three wide; from this lake the city receives a never ending supply of pure water. The Owasco River—the outlet from the lake—flows through this place, giving in part power to the immense business concerns here.

We will for one moment stand upon the bridge on Genesee street. That large establishment which looms up from the flowing river is the firm of D. M. Osborne & Co. This firm alone gives constant employment to 1400 persons. The business of the above firm is the manufacture of mowing and reaping machines. Passing down Seminary avenue, we arrive at one of the largest theological seminaries in the country. Their business, unlike Mr. Osborne's, is strictly confined to producing reapers; for scores of young men who graduate here at once enter the field as repears in life's harvest. The reapers from the former concern are in every market in the world; the same may be said of the latter, for I have met with students here from Trinidad, from Japan, and from all parts of the world. But let us leave the students just now and pass by many items for another letter.

We will walk down State street until we reach the wholesale hardware store run by the State. It is the prison. Here we find another class of reapers,—men reaping what has been sown. There are at present some 900 guests at this hotel; among them your humble scribe, who will for the best good of Quincy, Mass., remain for a season. Many here, like myself, can look back to the time when they were under the very best of influences. One short year ago, every Sabbath morn, I found myself listening to the words of life that fell from the lips of Rev. Mr. Norton, and after service I was talked to in Sabbath School, by Mr. King, for one hour. So earnest was he with his class, that I have thought at times, had I died in that class, the only verdict that could be given would have been, "this man was talked to death." But my teacher was faithful.

The more experience I have among convicts, the more I find to verify this statement: "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." Many of them have no control over themselves, and when provoked to anger have committed crimes that have placed them here for life. Two men with whom I have to do are near me; they have committed murder; it was many years ago, and, as I watch them, I can see that they are very unhappy. In fact, at times they don't act sane. The trouble is, they cannot blot from their memories that which they gladly would. Seventeen years ago, a man drew a dirk knife and stabbed another to death, and yesterday, talking with him, I could see that prison walls have not separated from him the spectre that haunts him to this hour.

But while we would all love to blot from our memories, if we could, all of the dark scenes, so would we retain all the sunshine that we may have gathered by the way; and we love to recall the pleasant scenes in our lives. I will for this time leave the dark prison, and go back in thought to your pleasant town. We walk down through the "stile," and, as we pass through Elm street, we wonder if nature could find anything to make that place more beautiful. Our steps are directed to the factory of Mr. John E. Drake, and there we meet with all our old associates. We enter the cutting room and find the old stand-by, Uncle Ephraim, he stands by his old business—keeping the room warm. Ephraim loves a warm climate, and, as one of his many friends, I hope his desire will be gratified through all ages. We find Grover present; he has returned from Wellesley. We descend to the next floor; if we enter the office, we find the genial proprietor, thinking, with the smoke curling sky-ward from his cigar or pipe. I have yet to meet the man who will perform so much labor himself, do such an extensive business, and perform the same with as much ease as Mr. Drake. We go below to the making-room; here we meet Henry. He shows his disposition in his face,—always pleasant and happy. All our concerts at home were led by him. We would not depart without seeing Mr. Hollis, whose heart is as large as his body, and whose body is of such huge proportions as makes it difficult to describe in the space that remains. JAMES T. MORAN.

A HARD RAP. The following paragraph, taken from an exchange, must have been by some female contributor: "Leap-year gives young ladies a gentleman's privileges in making love." Yes, perhaps it does. But no respectable young man will have anything to do with a young lady who takes a position on the street corner, and squirts tobacco juice on their coat-tails. Nor would it look well for a dozen or more young ladies to loaf around in front of a church for an hour and a half on Sunday nights, sparring and knocking one another's hats off, and dancing a tra-la-la on the sidewalk, in order to kill time until the congregation is dismissed, and then buckle up to a young man to escort him home.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 1884.

Congress is busy at work, as the daily reports from committees prove, though as yet the proceedings on the floor of both Houses have not reached the highest point of interest. A large part of the general legislation that will be considered during the present session has already been reported, or is in a forward state in committee, but the most important bills have not yet come in. The Banking and Currency committee has made no sign; that on Appropriations still is silent; and the Ways and Means has thus far been engaged in attention to private bills. It is expected that the tariff will be taken up in about a week, and then will come the tug of war. Representatives Morrison and Hewitt are each marking out the way for a tariff bill of his own, and experts are at work for both of them.

Within the last few days special interest has been directed to shipping bills, and "business interests" involved are earnestly engaged in watching legislation. Nineteen boards of trade and chambers of commerce have been holding a convention in the city, composed of delegates representing commercial bodies of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Paul, San Francisco, and other cities. In their report urging Congress to benefit the shipping interests by legislation, the idea embodied is, that though the tariff seems to be the question of the near future in the thought of the country, the most pressing question of the moment, and that for which constituencies are calling with greatest emphasis, relates to the revival of the American Mercantile marine. There is further hint to the effect that, should this exigent question be dealt with in a broad, radical, judicious and effective manner by the present Congress, the country will be disposed to pass a lenient judgment upon it, for whatever else it may do, or omit to do. The rise and decadence of American shipping is also briefly sketched, and the plans of relief sought are embodied in special reports. Two antagonistic influences are at work in this matter; one urging subsidy for the evil under which shipping labors, and the other advocating a free trade policy, whereby merchants can avail themselves of cheap foreign built ships. Between the two extremes are many who hold conservative positions, so that the committee will not suffer for advice.

Among decided steps taken by the House of Representatives during the week was the repeal of the iron clad oath of office. An almost unanimous declaration in favor of the forfeiture of unearned land grants was voted. There was also an effort made to prevent lobbying, by the introduction of a bill requiring ex-members of Congress to swear to disinterestedness in the legislation pending, before the Speaker shall issue them a passage to the privileges of the floor. Both Houses passed a bill for the early fitting out of a relief expedition to the Arctic regions, in behalf of Lieut. Greely's party. There were discussions in the Senate before the passage of the bill on the wisdom of the Arctic explorations, as well as on the limitation of the proposed appropriation, in which Senators Frye, Ingalls, Hale, Bayard, Saulsbury, and Conger participated. Mr. Saulsbury thought the men for so hazardous a voyage should not go by compulsion of the President, but as volunteers, and the bill, amended to this effect, was passed by the Senate, but, on motion of Mr. Randall, was rejected by the House. The amount of money to be expended was left to the discretion of the President.

The Senate has also had under consideration a bill providing for a civil government in the Territory of Alaska; has given the American "grunter" still further attention, and has voted in favor of a resolution offered by Senator Butler of South Carolina, for allowing a clerk to each senator, who is not a chairman of a committee. It is proposed that senators' clerks be employed only during the session, at six dollars a day, to be paid out of the contingent fund. This is another easy way to get rid of the embarassment of riches in the Treasury vaults, and the House, it is thought, will soon follow the lead of the Senate, pleading the constitutional equality of the two Houses, as well as the need of clerical assistance, to justify the move.

Frederic Douglass, the noted colored orator, who lives in a suburb of Washington, has just married a white woman of this city, twenty years younger than himself. From the sensation the affair has made among the African inhabitants of the District, it would seem they consider the event the most important one in the history of the race since the emancipation proclamation. ### Not Until Next Time.

I dreamed that we were lovers still,
As tender as we used to be,
When I brought you the daffodil,
And you looked up and smiled at me.

True sweet hearts were we then indeed,
When youth was budding into bloom;
But now the flowers have gone to seed,
And breezes have left no perfume.

Because you ever, ever will Take such a crooked view of things,
Distorting this and that until
Confusion ends in cavillings.

Because you never, never will
Perceive the force of what I say;
As if I always reasoned ill,—
Enough to take one's breath away.

But what if riper love replace
The vision that enchanted me,
When all you did was perfect grace,
And all you said was melody?

And what if loyal heart renew
The image, never quite forgone,
Combining, as of yore, in you
A Samson and a Solomon?

Then to the breezes will I toss
The straws we split, with temper's loss
The seal upon your lips anew
The peace that gentle hearts ensue.

Oh, welcome then, ye playful ways,
And sunshine of the early days,
And banish to the clouds above
Dull reason, that bedarkens love.

Farm and Garden.

How to Make Hens Lay.

To get a plentiful supply of eggs in winter, young hens are necessary. Pullets hatched in April and May will prove most satisfactory. The hen-house must be warm and kept clean. Provide plenty of fresh water always. A variety of food is absolutely necessary, but wheat or screenings should be the main feed. Corn has more fattening than egg-producing properties, and should be fed sparingly. Buckwheat is valuable feed for hens. Oats are not worth much, but will do to make out the variety.

Feed in the morning a warm mess of meal, middlings or something of that sort, mixed stiff, but feed no soft feed after the middle of the day. Only dry grain should be in a hen's crop upon going to roost. Fresh meat must be fed. Lard or tallow scraps are good; both can be bought at the soap factories, the former costing $2 and the latter $1 per hundred. Scraps should be broken up and soaked over night, warmed and fed in the morning. Meal may be added. Hens also require vegetable food. Carrots are best; chop as fine as kernels of corn, and about twice a week add a few onions. For shell material use oyster or clam shells, both browned and raw. Break them fine. Keep plenty of fine sand where your hens can have full access to it. Another important consideration is, make no sudden change in your manner of feeding, as every radical change diminishes the supply of eggs. Provide plenty of nests, and never allow your hens to be chased by boys, worried by dogs or frightened in any way. Perfect quiet must reign in the poultry house, or eggs will be scarce. Let no one who has neglected his hens expect a full supply of eggs immediately after commencing a systematic course of feeding. It will take weeks, perhaps months, before the best results will be realized.

Lights in the Barn.

It is estimated that nine-tenths of all fires are caused by carelessness. Now is the season when the lantern is frequently used in the barn, and we give a word of caution. Never light a lamp or lantern of any kind in the barn. Smokers may include their pipes and cigars in the above. The lantern should be lighted in the house or some outbuilding where no combustibles are stored. A lantern which does not burn well, should never be put in order in the hay mow. There is a great temptation to strike a match and re-light an extinguished lantern, wherever it may be. It is best to even feel one's way out to a safe place, than to run any risks. If the light is not kept in the hand, it should be hung up. Provide hooks in the various rooms where the lights are used. A wire running the whole length of the horse stable, at the rear of the stalls, and furnished with a sliding hook, is very convenient for night work with the horses. Some farmers are so careless as to keep the lamp oil in the barn and fill the lantern there while the wick is burning. Such risks are too great, even if the buildings are insured.—American Agriculturist for February.

Anecdotes.

Jack (aged four, taking a walk)—"What become of people when they die?"

Mamma—"They turn to dust, dear."

Jack—"What a lot of people there must be on this road then."

"Little baby is very ill, Charley; I am afraid he will die."

"Well, if he does die, mamma, he won't go to the bad place."

"Why, Charley, how can you know that?"

"O, I know he can't mamma; he's got no teeth to gnash."

A gentleman from Philadelphia came to Austin, not long since, and had a commission from a lady to her brother, which he was anxious to carry at once.

"Where will I find Mr. B——, who is in the grocery business?" he asked of an Austinite.

"There are two brothers of that name, both in the grocery business," was the reply.

"Which do you wish to see?" "I mean the one that has a sister in Philadelphia."

Tottie—"I wonder why dolls are always girls, Tom?"

Tom—"Because boys hate to be made babies of."

A wag says to one of his friends in the most solemn manner, "if my employer does not take back what he said to me this morning, I shall leave his house."

"Why, what did he say?" "He told me that I could look for another place!"

The following from Officer Grant, of the New Haven Police Force:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Aug. 17, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—For the past year and a half I have been afflicted with malaria, attended by the usual symptoms. I have been treated by competent physicians, but without lasting benefit. About one month ago I began the use of your Red Jacket Bitters. I am now wholly free from malaria, and propose to depend upon your Bitters in the future as a safeguard against that disease. Yours, &c.,

J. W. GRANT.

Fashion Notes.

Pinked out bands of cloth from the newest trimming for cloth suits.

Cloth bonnets and toques are now considered more elegant than those of felt.

High heels are no longer worn on evening shoes, but are still used upon day boots.

French women are wearing short walking skirts of seal skin, with seal skin coats.

Frills of lace down the front of the corsage are considered more elegant than buttons.

Worth uses tulle in preference to every other fabric for ball dresses for young ladies.

Long, ornamental shell hairpins are made dressy with Rhine stones in the curved ends.

Evening costumes of finest cashmere in pale evening tints are exceedingly fashionable.

Evening dresses with pointed waists and V necks are as becoming as they are fashionable.

Letters from Paris say that the crinolette has altogether disappeared from fashionable society.

Yellowish reds, such as copper color, caldron and lobster or crevette, are popular for evening wear.

Nearly all the latest shoulder capes have a band of fur around the edges and a fur collar about the neck.

Household Receipts.

HOARSENESS. Horseradish will afford instaneous relief in most obstinate cases of hoarseness. The root, of course possesses the most virtue, though the leaves are good till they dry, when they loose their strength. The root is best when green. The person who will use it freely just before beginning to speak will not be troubled with hoarseness.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING. Take one quart of milk, ten tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, the yolks of six eggs and one cupful of sugar; flavor with vanilla if desired. Sprinkle six tablespoofuls of grated chocolate over the top. Bake slowly one hour. When done spread the beaten whites of the six eggs over the top.

☞ Cheap ginger cookies are made thus: One cupful of molasses, one cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of warm water, one cupful of lard, two tablespoonfuls of ginger, and one teaspoonful of soda; stir with flour, but do not mix hard; bake in a quick oven. Do not roll as thin as for ginger-snaps, and cut the cookies with a cutter which has deep and generous scallops.

For chapped hands, instead of washing the hands with soap, employ oatmeal, and, after each washing, take a little dry oatmeal and rub over the hands, so as to absorb any moisture.

Children or adults subject to ear-ache should wear a little raw cotton in the ears during this season.

A good way to exercise the arms is to swing them backward and forward, touching them each time.

A medical writer suggests the use of oil of wintergreen, with an equal quantity of olive oil or soap liniment, as an application for rheumatism.

Sage tea, with a little bay rum added, makes a good wash for the hair when it inclines to fall out. It renders the hair soft and induces growth.

Brush the hair every night and keep the scalp clean and free from dandruff; also clip the ends of the hair regularly once every month, if you would keep it thick and soft.

Conundrums.

When does a man get the cheapest bread?—When he has a roll down stairs.

What is the difference between a blunder and a wedding?—One is a mistake and the other a take-miss.

Why are washerwomen great travelers?—They are continually crossing the line, and running from pole to pole.

What animal has death no effect upon?—A pig; when killed he can be cured.

What flowers should ladies resemble, and what flowers not resemble?—They should be roses, but not prim-roses.

Why are ladies like churches?—There is no living without them.

How is the best way to enjoy the happiness of courting?—Find a little gal and try (gallantry).

This and That.

☞ A young man having asked a girl if he might go home with her from singing class, and been refused, said: "You're as full of airs as a music box." "Perhaps so," she retorted; "but if I am I don't go with a crank."

☞ A young man urged, as one of the reasons why a girl should marry him, that he had a collection of over 400 different kinds of wood. She said if it was kindling wood she would think of it.

☞ Cloudy days are many; bright days are few. We must catch each ray of sunlight as it comes. The clouds gather, and as they roll they hide the distant shores from our sight. The clouds that hide our future never lift. Blessed shadow! Who would wish to see one step along the way? An unseen hand will guide us safely to the other side, if we take firm hold and cast our care on Him. It is better to trust than to see.

☞ Little Fred got very much out of patience with his mamma, one day last week, and informed her, with all the vehemence compatible with his three years and a half, that for his part he wished he'd never come to her house to live!

☞ The other day a grocer sold an old farmer a gallon of tar, through mistake for molasses. After discovering the mistake he waited to hear some complaint; but hearing none, wrote to the old fellow, who replied as follows: "Much obliged fur the c'reckshun; but it come too late, as all the stuff is done used up. Wife, she 'lowed that thar was sunthin' outen fix with the lasses; but I 'lowed she must be pregedist."

☞ "The things we call women" are according to Mrs. Swisshelm of Chicago, "simply small packages of aches and pains done up in velvet and lace and topped off with ostrich plumes."

Miscellany.

LICENSE. In Massachusetts we have a law against granting a liquor license within four hundred feet of a school-house, and we are apt to look on the Southern states as behind the times; but this is the way they manage in Tennessee. No grog-shop is allowed within four miles of a chartered school, and this is the way it came about. A Yankee school-master opened an academy which he called a college, under a charter from the legislature. He received a most cordial support and patronage, but the saloons sprung up around him, and he soon found that each afternoon many of his pupils were too much under the influence of alcohol to work. He appealed to the legislature to give him relief, or he must close the college. As they could not by their constitution pass a special law for his case, they made the general law that no grog-shop should exist within four miles of a chartered school, and the result is that to-day there are in Tennessee four hundred chartered schools.—Exchange.

☞ A little girl six or seven years old entered the Merrimack Savings Bank and said that she wanted to see the institution. She was shown all through it, and examined everything so carefully that finally the puzzled officials asked her object. "Why, the bank is all right," she said. "My name is Amy Bell; and my papa put five dollars into this savings bank for me yesterday, and I wanted to see what kind of a place it was. I never was in a bank before."

☞ There are 381 electric lights in the streets and squares of Boston; the total number of public lamps in the city is 12,623, a decrease of 344 during the year, each electric light displacing an average of three and one-half lamps. By the way, the new electric lights on the mall from West street to Park square have been utilized. They are pretty close together, and the pathway is as light as in the daytime.

☞ A very long funeral cortege passed up Main street, Hartford, a day or two since. In the hearse, resting against one side of the casket, was a floral pillow constructed of white carnations, with the familiar legend "O. K." set conspicuously upon its face in English violets. The letters were intended to be significant as the initials of the gentleman in the coffin, Mr. O' Keefe.

☞ After an engagement of over 50 years James O. Smith and Mrs. Durant were recently married in Branford, Conn. The groom is 80 years old and his bride 70. Their great grandchildren were at the wedding.

☞ Another man comes to the front and wants individual fortunes in this country limited to $10,000,000. This is a plot to keep editors from monopolizing all the wealth of the land. Shame!

☞ Over 10,000 women are employed in the shirt and collar manufactories of Troy, N. Y., and the pay roll of one concern averages over $1000 per day.

Baron Rupertswood, the richest man in Australia, is worth $200,000,000. His father, Mr. Clark, went to New South Wales with a few thousand pounds and bought land where the city of Melbourne afterwards was built.

☞ "Lulu," who was famous as the man who for years personated a female acrobat, and whose great feat consisted in being fired from a catapult, has retired from the ring, and will open a photograph gallery in Bridgeport, Conn.

SILVER DOLLARS. The issue of standard silver dollars from the mints during the week ending Jan. 12 was $120,000. The issue for the corresponding period of last year was $334,998.

☞ You can rent a sealskin sacque in Chicago for fifty dollars a season. This is cheaper than house rent, for a woman can live in a sealskin sacque on the street all winter.

☞ The man who was detected in the act of burglarizing a laundry declared that he had only dropped in to see about getting some washing. "Good," said the officer, "and now you'll want ironing," and he nipped a pair of handcuffs on him.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

☞ Passenger (faintly)—"C'lect fares—'fore we get across! I thought we." Mate—"Beg y'r pardon sir, but our orders is, in bad weather, to be partic'lar careful to collect fares; 'cause in a gale like this 'ere, there's no knowing how soon we may all go to the bottom!"

☞ She was in the dimly-lighted reception room of a city dry goods store; and, walking up to a tall mirror placed against the wall, remarked: "Why, how came you here?" Then, observing some surprise, not to say amusement, on the faces of the other occupants of the room, she saw her mistake and exclaimed in great confusion "I thought it was my sister; we're twins."

☞ A man going home at a late hour in the night saw that the occupants of a house standing flush with the street had left a window up, and he decided to warn them and prevent a burglary. Putting his head into the window, he called out, "Hello! good people." That was all he said. A whole pailful of water struck him in the face, and as he staggered back a woman shrieked out, "Didn't I tell you what you'd get if you wasn't home by 9 o'clock?"

Poetry.

Valuation.

The old Squire said as he stood by his gate,
 And his neighbor, the Deacon, went by,
"In spite of my bank stock and real estate,
 You are better off, Deacon, than I.

"We're both growing old, and the end's drawing near,
 You have less of this world to resign,
But in heaven's appraisal your assets, I fear,
 Will reckon up greater than mine.

"They say I am rich, but I'm feeling so poor
 I wish I could swap with you even;
The pounds I have lived for and laid up in store
 For the shillings and pence you have given."

"Well, Squire," said the Deacon, with shrewd common sense,
 While his eye had a twinkle of fun,
"Let your pounds take the way of my shillings and pence,
 And the thing can be easily done."

—J. G. Whittier.

Letter from New York City.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30, 1884.

Editors of the Patriot:—

A little while ago the weather prophets were out in full force declaring that we should have next to no winter at all. Vast were their numbers and varied their theories. Some disdained to parade the extravagant theories advanced by certain celebrated weather seers, and verified their predictions by reference to signs well-flavored by age. They told us that the knowing squirrel had neglected to provide himself with winter's food; that corn and onion had disdained to clothe themselves with a usual thickness of husk and skin, etc., etc., and hence, reasoned they, we can have no real winter. Of course some of us believed them, and are now surprised at the early arrival and determined stay of an untoward winter. An abundance of snow, ice, sleighing, skating, and zero weather, have made the season quite remarkable, but while metropolitans are put to all sorts of inconveniences by the present inclemency, they congratulate themselves that they will be enabled to cheaply procure the wherewith to keep cool next summer, for the Hudson's ice yield is larger and better than for many years.

THE THEATRES.

This week there are but two theatrical events of special importance here. One is the production of Mr. Bartley Campbell's new play, "Separation," which instantly won a popular success and is, in plot and dialogue, one of the brightest and best yet devised by that favorite and prolific author.

The only great theatrical event of note is the appearance of Thomas W. Keene, tragedian, an actor who, beginning at the very bottom of the ladder has through hard work risen to a lofty place in the profession. Although well and widely known in the West, he appeared for the first time in a principle part in New York this week, at Niblo's Garden Theatre, in the character of Richard the Third, where he is delighting and thrilling his audiences by his wonderful delineation of that weird and difficult part, which seems to fit him as well as Hamlet does Booth. To the writer who has seen the character impersonated by many noted actors, Mr. Keene's performance seems wonderfully artistic and vivid. In make-up it is entirely original, and lacks those distressing vocal and gestural mannerisms which so mars the effect of some otherwise great performances.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The general aspect of business was very depressing when the year opened but now begins to show marked signs of improvement. The increasing demand for iron in various large industries is accepted as a surety that those iron works now in operation will continue work, while the reduced cost in production which the recent amicable arrangements made with the laborers as to wages in the iron districts have brought about, give the manufacturers some assurance of profit.

The stock market is steadily recovering from the recent depression, and the feeling of uncertainty that has invaded business circles for the past month is giving place to a feeling of moderate, though wholesome confidence, which gives promise of a year of at least fair commercial prosperity.

THE TELEPHONE CONTROVERSY.

The recent denial of the United States Court in Philadelphia to grant the application of the Bell Telephone Company to restrain the Overland Telephone Company from using electric telephonic apparatus, gives the long suffering public hope that they may at last see the telephone developed to meet the needs of the people. The point at issue is the priority of invention claimed by the Bell Company, and until recently they have received the protection of the courts in that claim, and injunctions have met each effort to work the telephone outside of the Bell Company; but lately Daniel Drawbaugh, of Pennsylvania, has undertaken to prove that he previously invented the telephone, and produces some startling evidence, and the Bell Company produce a large mass of rebutting testimony which will not be finally decided upon for three months, but the fact that their evidence is not considered sufficiently strong to justify the granting of a temporary injunction is a bad omen for the Bell people. The public interest in the case is strong and against the Bell Company, whose policy is to restrict the telephone to its present imperfect use on short circuits, instead of adopting later improvements—particularly that of long distance transmission.

A BLACK FOG.

A dense fog known as a "black fog," and attributed to the effects of a moderating temperature upon the vast masses of ice in our rivers, has completely shrouded our city to-day. It was the thickest that has occurred in the memory of the present generation, and occasioned the greatest inconvenience in travel upon the elevated trains and ferries. There were several collisions upon the elevated roads, owing to the failure of the train men to see the signals. Fortunately there was no further damage done than to badly shatter the cars and frighten the passengers, as the trains moved with the greatest caution. Several boats went aground and collided despite the greatest of care on the part of the pilots, and for the first time in its history the Brooklyn Bridge was properly appreciated and availed of by persons wishing to cross the river.

An Important Case.

Dennis Ford, of West Quincy, who was arrested last week by Officer Furnald, on complaint of Commonwealth, for an assault, and whose case was continued, was before the Court on Tuesday morning. The affair caused immense excitement, and the district court room was crowded by those who felt an interest in it.

Many females in Quincy, for the past few years, have had their cloaks and dresses nearly ruined by some person wickedly throwing some vile compound upon them as they passed along the streets. But as no arrests were made the evil continued, and hundreds of dollars worth of clothing was injured.

Many felt pleased when they learned that Mr. Ford had been arrested, and expressed a wish that he should be severely punished, if found guilty. Ford had many friends present who hoped that something might be said or done to show that he was not the guilty party; but the Judge, after having carefully examined numerous witnesses, found the defendent guilty and fined him $20 and costs, amounting to $34.

The Charter Granted.

The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Massachusetts held its semi-annual meeting in Boston on Thursday, Grand Master Cochrane of Fall River and one hundred and thirteen new members were admitted. The report of the Grand Master showed Odd Fellowship to be in a prosperous condition. The committee on Charters reported in favor of the restoration of the charter formerly held by Mt. Wollaston Lodge, No. 80, of Quincy, and the Grand Lodge adopted said recommendation. Charters were also granted for lodges in Middleboro and Maynard. Other business of importance to Odd Fellows was transacted.

So confident were the petitioners for the return of the charter of Mt. Wollaston Lodge, that they have gone forward and nearly completed arrangements for instituting, although the date will be two or three weeks from now. Wilson's new hall has been decided on as the location, and already the carpenters have been busy putting in platforms, etc. The committee on supplies have visited Boston several times, and are now prepared to give orders for the necessary paraphernalia and furniture. Much enthusiasm is shown, and doubtless a good lodge will be the result.

BIRTH STATISTICS. During the year 1883 there were 371 births in the town of Quincy. The smallest number of these births occurred in January, there being but nineteen, thirteen of the number being boys. The largest number of births of any one month was in August, when fifty-two young Quincyites made their debut; of this number thirty-six were boys. During the month of June there was an increase of forty, the sexes being nearly equally divided. Six homes were made doubly happy, having been blest with twins,—nine boys and three girls. The males predominated throughout the year. The year preceding (1882) there were 326. September had the largest number, and May the smallest. In 1881 there were but 293. The population is fast increasing.

If any errors should be found in the list, by notifying the Town Clerk at once, corrections will be made.

LEVEE. At the Town Hall, Quincy, on Wednesday evening next, a very fine entertainment will take place. The Universalist Society has engaged an excellent company from Hingham, who will give George M. Baker's drama in two acts, entitled "Above the Clouds," and the farce by John Madison Morton, "A Regular Fix." These pieces have recently been performed in Hingham, so says the Journal, to full houses, giving much pleasure and satisfaction. We have no doubt that a full house will greet them, and enjoy an evening most pleasantly. There will be for sale ice cream, cake, pastry of all kinds, chowders, and all the good things that help make it one of the leading events of the season. For full particulars see advertisement.

☞ The sixteenth business and social meeting of the F. F. F. Association was held on Wednesday evening with one of its members, Mrs. Jennie Corliss, at her residence in West Quincy. Mrs. Martin, her granddaughter, with whom the old lady made her home, who while visiting in Braintree was taken very seriously sick, is slowly improving.

☞ The original Alabamians Jubilee Singers will give a sacred concert at the Town Hall, on Sunday evening. ☞ The circulation of the Boston Sunday Globe is constantly increasing in Quincy. The bright stories, chatty letters, entertaining gossip, fashion notes, etc., given in addition to all the news, make the Sunday Globe particularly attractive to ladies and young folks.

DECEASED. Miss Ellen J., daughter of Mr. Michael Devlin, who died on Monday last has been a great sufferer for many months. She was a very capable and industrious woman and her family and friends deeply lament her loss. Her funeral took place on Wednesday from St. John's Church and was largely attended.

A GOOD TIME. The ladies of the Benevolent Sewing Circle connected with Atlantic Mission held a sale of fancy and useful articles in rooms on Walnut street, on Wednesday afternoon and evening. A supper was also provided. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather there was a large attendance, and the financial result was most satisfactory. It was a pleasant gathering of friends and neighbors who passed some agreeable hours in the enjoyment of social intercourse. The ladies are to be congratulated on the complete success attending their efforts.

The prospects for the erection of a church building in Atlantic are brightening daily. We hope that this desirable end will speedily be attained.

Quincy Point Items.

PERSONAL.

As Mr. William M. Wight was walking along in Boston one day last week, he noticed a man just ahead of him knock something with his foot, then start, as if to pick it up, but abandon the idea and pass along. Mr. Wight picked up the rejected package which had attracted the other's attention and put it in his pocket; on reaching home he opened the same and found that it contained a fine diamond ring. The next morning's papers advertised the loss of the same, and on returning it to the jeweller, Mr. Wight learned that the diamond was worth $150, though probably valued at a much higher figure, it being a family jewel. It had been sent from Philadelphia to the jeweller for resetting. The work had been done, and the boy on his way to the express office had dropped the package. The firm were exceedingly pleased with its recovery, and gave the liberal reward of $30.

Mr. Hiram W. Phillips is one of the divers at work on the wrecked City of Columbus.

On Sunday morning last Mr. James J. Malone hung his overcoat on a clothes line at the corner of his house, and on going for it immediately after dinner found it gone. He immediately began making inquiries concerning it, and learned that one young man at the Neck had seen a man pass S. F. Newcomb's grocery store, wearing a nice overcoat, though otherwise very shabbily dressed. Mr. Furnald has been on the lookout for the past week for the thief, but has not succeeded in finding him yet.

Mr. Dariel Leland has been very dangerously ill for the past few days, and is not expected to live.

Wm. Savage went across Town River on the ice last Friday, to dig clams. On returning, as he got on the edge of the channel, the ice broke and let him through. The accident was seen by two persons, though both were a good distance from the man, but who immediately summoned help and went to his assistance. With the help of several men he was drawn into one of the boats entirely exhausted. He was probably in the water nearly an hour, and could not have held out but a few moments more.

Mrs. Daniel Higgins has gone to Eastham for a week.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

On Sunday morning last, after an excellent sermon by Rev. J. L. Harris, pastor, this gentleman assumed the new role of church debt raiser with great success. After repeating the statement made by the building committee on dedication night, he explained that the church was anxious to reduce the debt at once, and he was amply rewarded in his efforts by having $773 pledged to be paid by the close of the present year. During the Sabbath School session immediately following this sum was raised to $831, and still further increased before the close of the evening service to the goodly sum of $1110. The result is exceedingly gratifying to many who have taken great interest in the affairs of the church and who are desirous to see the whole debt cancelled in as short a time as possible.

On Wednesday the Ladies' Aid Society held a sociable in the vestry, and though the evening was stormy there were quite a number present and a very pleasant time was enjoyed. A good programme was carried out and followed by the renting of about one-half of the pews in the church

The ladies are evidently alive and mean to do considerable work this winter. On next Wednesday there will be a good entertainment in the vestry. Admission, 10 cents; after which ice cream and cake will be served.

W. S. A.

There will be a special meeting of the Washington School Association held on Monday at 7.30 o'clock, in the vestry of the Congregational Church. All graduates of Washington School are cordially invited to attend and become actual members of the same.

Wollaston Items.

In my last letter, or rather, as these little articles should be called, "Gossip from Wollaston," mention was made of the rumors that were current, that the K. of H. boys were proposing to give us another of their excellent entertainments. Last season, when they brought out the fine play of "Our Boys," they were greeted with large audiences on both evenings, and many requests have been made for a repetition of the play. This year, however, minstrelsy seems to be the rage, and the boys, having caught the fever are preparing to furnish us with an evening of frolic and fun. As success has always crowned their efforts, we can safely predict for them large and enthusiastic audiences. No doubt local hits will be indulged in. "Newport" expects to come in for his share.

The K. and L. of H. will hold its regular meeting on Tuesday evening next, on which occasion an official visit from the Grand Lodge is expected.

The concert that was to have been given on Wednesday evening by the Wollaston Oratorio Society, was postponed until next Wednesday. The programme will include piano solos by W. H. Powell, Esq., songs by Mrs. E. A. King and Miss M. A. McGee, and James J. Lord; besides part songs.

W. J. Wellington and his wife had a narrow escape from serious injury on Thursday of last week, by the overturning of their carriage on Beale street. Mr. Wellington, no doubt, will soon forget his little remembrance of the occasion, but not just how it happened.

A few of the parishioners connected with the Congregational society surprised their former pastor, Rev. W. R. Lord, and wife, by calling Thursday evening at their residence, and leaving besides their kind wishes very acceptable re minders of the occasion, in the shape of two elegant rocking chairs.

The members of the Baptist Church had one of their pleasant gatherings Thursday evening, and the time passed very rapidly in discussing the merits of the old-fashioned, yet ever welcome New England dish.

Some of our streets are in a wretched condition; in fact very dangerous in some places, and we hope that the Selectmen will force the officers of the Water Board to fulfil their contract.

Citizens' Temperance Committee.

In pursuance of the following call, ordered by the chairman, Mr. Theophilus King, Jr., and issued by the Secretary, Rev. G. B. Lawton, a meeting of the Citizens' Temperance Committee was held at the residence of Mr. H. H. Faxon, last Tuesday evening:—

The efforts of our Committee in securing a "No" vote on the license question has been so successfully followed by a vigorous enforcement of the law that the liquor business has been fairly driven from our town. Laxity of effort now on the part of temperance people will be quickly interpreted by the liquor interest as an indication that what has been accomplished was but the result of a temporary wave which will now recede. One or two evenings given to the planning of another campaign will continue the present gratifying situation by bringing defeat once more to those who venture to hope for a change.

Members from all parts of the town responded to the call, and the result was an earnest meeting, during which efficient means were adopted to secure at the approaching town meeting as large a vote against issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating drinks as was polled last year.

Mr. Theophilus King, Jr., the chairman, presided. The Rev. G. B. Lawton, secretary for the last two years, sent in his resignation, duties assumed in another town calling him away from Quincy. The Rev. D. M. Wilson was chosen to fill the vacancy.

After discussion, it was voted that, as heretofore, an address be prepared, setting forth the beneficial effects upon the town of the no-license regime, and appealing to the citizens to still secure them. It was also decided to hold a series of meetings, to be addressed by the ablest of our citizens and of speakers from abroad. The first meeting will be held in Town Hall, on the evening of Sunday, Feb. 24th; next at West Quincy, Feb. 28th, and then in all districts of the town, on Sunday evening, March 2.

The Committee look for generous support and co-operation.

JURORS. Messrs. Warren B. Munroe and David C. Nelson have been drawn to serve as jurors at the February term of the Supreme Judicial Court for Norfolk County.

NO CURE. NO PAY! Dr. Lawrence's Gough Balsam, when once used takes the place of all others. See our advertising columns. Nov. 10.—1y

Wedding Bells.

There was a pleasant gathering on the evening of January 23d at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. French, on Pleasant street, Holbrook, on which occasion their daughter, Miss Henrietta N. French, was united in marriage to Mr. William H. Doble, of Quincy. Rev. O. S. Deane, pastor of the Winthrop Church, officiated.

The bride wore a white costume, white veil and roses; the bridegroom the conventional dress-suit. The bay window in which the young couple were married was tastefully decorated and festooned with flowers and smilax. After the ceremony congratulations were extended to Mr. and Mrs. Doble; refreshments were served, and the guests mingled in social converse. Miss Josie Adams favored the company with singing, Mr. Frank Beals playing the accompaniment.

West Quincy Items.

The leap-year party given in the Temperance Hall, on Monday evening, by the young ladies of this place, was a grand success, about thirty couples were present, and the floor was entirely under the management of the young ladies. Miss C. M. Ames and Mrs. N. A. Badger were floor directors, assisted by the following efficient aids: Misses May Badger, Nettie Ames, Emma Farnum, Carrie Collins, Lizzie Randlett, Emma Davies, Cora Gragg and Emma West. Music was furnished by Hanson and Ross, and during the intermission ice cream and cake was served. The gentlemen were deprived of their usual luxury of smoking, as the ladies occupied the room usuall y used for that purpose. A fine time was enjoyed by all, and the young gentlemen are anxiously awaiting for another similar affair.

Mr. Charles H. Fuller has arrived home from an extended visit of several weeks in the State of Maine.

Mr. J. N. Frost, the gentlemanly book-keeper at Messrs. E. H. Doble & Co.'s, is away for a few weeks on a "wedding vacation."

A sociable was given at the M. E. Church, on Thursday evening, by the Ladies' Aid Society. Singing, reading, etc., was on the programme.

The Apollo Club still retains its usual interest, and meets at the schoolhouse every Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. The "Apollo Gazette," and the select readings by different members of the club add much to the pleasure of the members; and the debates are also becoming quite spicy. A.

ENTERED. The Bridgewater Savings Bank was broken into on Friday morning of this week, but nothing was taken. The rascals set the building on fire.

Vegetine has never failed to cure the most inflexible case of canker.

A Great Man Gone.

On Saturday last, Mr. Wendell Phillips, the greatest agitator and orator of this country, died of heart disease at his residence, in Boston. He was son of Hon. John Phillips, the first mayor of that city. For nearly half a century he has stood before the whole country as the fearless champion of justice for the oppressed, and for popular reform. He despised caste, and was the friend of the masses. He labored continually and unfettered in his chosen life work, and lived to witness the overthrow of slavery. In other reforms, temperance, labor, financial, etc., he was not the effective agent which he proved in the cause of slavery, finding in them not so broad or so sure foothold. But in everything which engaged his attention he was earnest and sincere, and knew nothing of half purposes or lukewarm advocacy.

For the Patriot.

Wendell Phillips.

When Congress undertook to refuse the right of petition, Rev. John Pierpoint wrote as follows:

"We do not kneel, we stand,
We have said the word,
And our petitions
Shall be heard."

And when a slave was carried from Boston by virtue of the Fugitive Slave Act, he said:

"Leashed with her hounds, must we Run down the poor who flee
From slavery's hell?
Great God! when we do this,
Exclude us from thy bliss;
At us let angels hiss,
From heaven that fell!"

After our Massachusetts soldiers, on the way to Washington, had been shot down by the mob in Baltimore, Mr. Pierpont offered his services as chaplain to the next regiment, if on their way to Washington, they would march through Baltimore. It was, therefore, perfectly proper that the funeral services over the remains of Wendell Phillips should take place in the pulpit occupied for many years by this heroic preacher, Rev. John Pierpoint, and where that distinguished friend of Mr. Phillips, Francis Jackson, worshipped for many years, and in a church building that has passed out of the hands of any sectarian society. The services were brief and appropriate, as your readers have been informed by the daily papers. Among the old friends and co-workers of Mr. Phillips and Mr. Garrison in the anti-slavery cause who were present we noticed the following: Hon. Samuel E. Sewall, the only survivor, save one, of the New England Anti-slavery Society, organized in 1832; Robert F. Walcutt, Elizur Wright, Theodore D. Weld, Hon. J. N. Buffum, of Lynn; Elias Richards, of Weymouth, Col. Higginson, Frederick Douglass, Mrs. Maria W. Chapman, one of the ladies who were driven out of the hall in Boston by the mob in 1835; Mrs. Lucy Stone, Miss Susan B. Anthony, and an old lady from Tilton, N. H., who said she was expelled from the church many years ago because she was an Abolitionist.

The remains were for three hours in Faneuil Hall, and yet the time was too short for the vast multitude to take a final view. It was very appropriate that his remains should lay in Faneuil Hall, under guard of colored soldiers, and in front of the platform where he made his first anti-slavery speech, forty-six years before. We hope a large-sized portrait of Mr. Phillips will be placed in this Hall. It should eclipse that of the distinguished lawyer who pronounced the sublime truths of the Declaration of Independence as "mere glittering generalities." Should the portraits of these two distinguished men be hung in Faneuil Hall, the contrast between the two men they represent would, we think, be greater even than the persons represented by the two statues in front of the Capitol of the State. H. W. B.

Braintree Chips.

The Butcher Boy Engine Company reorganized Monday evening and is officered as follows:—J. T. Mellus foreman, Charles Turner first assistant, John Conden second assistant, John Moils clerk, Thomas Fallon treasurer, L. W. Thayer steward, and Walter Howland, H. M. Hobart and J. A. Stevens standing committee.

The Board of Engineers are M. A. Perkins chief, J. W. Dorety clerk, W. M. Richards, G. D. Whittaker, R. Gillespie and Thomas South.

The wedding of Miss H. Flora, youngest daughter of Prof. T. H. Dearing, to Mr. George H. Curtis, of Helena, M. T., at her father's residence, on the 5th inst., was a very pleasant occasion. There were more than a hundred presents, all beautiful and useful, and many of them very valuable.

District Court, Quincy.

The following cases have been before the District Court this week:—

Henry J. Shaw, of Weymouth, for an assault. Discharged.

John Sullivan, of Quincy, for being drunk. Fined $1 and costs.

Rodney A. Taber, of Holbrook, for keeping a liquor nuisance. Fined $50 and costs. Appealed.

Dennis Ford, of West Quincy, for assault. Fined $20 and costs.

Cornelius O' Keefe, of Randolph, for assault. Fined $3 and costs.

John Kelley, of East Weymouth, for an assault on Adams Jones. Fined $5 and costs. For being drunk, he was fined $1 and costs.

James Mullen, of Quincy, for vagrancy was sent to the almshouse for four months.

☞ A farm in the town of Elliott, Maine, has been the home of nine generations of one family, having been handed down from father to son for nearly 250 years. The first house was built of bricks imported from the old country, but in 1736 it was so shaken by an earthquake that it was torn down and the present structure built of heavy oak timber. Upward of seventy-five children have been born and brought up here, and it is recorded that only one unmarried person has ever died in it, expect one child who was accidentally killed.

County Matters.

We have had occasion for the past few weeks to call the attention of our readers to the meagre way and manner which has been adopted the past two years, to give information as to where and how the County money goes. We have written these articles not because we believe the officers of the County were dishonest; but because we think the method adopted now to be the poorest we have known for the past thirty years. When only one pamphlet for four hundred persons is sent to a town for distribution, the masses must be kept in ignorance, unless there is some other way adopted to give the people the facts.

The Commissioners think they have done all that lie in their power to give information on this subject; we do not. But it is useless to discuss that point further. What should be done is, that the statutes be so changed as to give the County Commissioners full powers and discretion in the matter; relying on their wisdom and judgment; then if it is not wisely done they certainly will be to blame. The law should be so changed as to authorize the Commissioners to publish the annual statement of "receipts and expenditures of the county" in two or more papers in the county, and to print the report in pamphlet form for free distribution to citizens of the county, in such numbers as they shall deem sufficient to give the fullest information to the citizens.

We are of the opinion that the report should be published in every paper in the County; not only those which have a large circulation, but in all, unless the Commissioners find some good reason for not doing so; in that case they should distribute more freely the report in pamphlet form.

Quincy Charitable Society.

At a meeting of this society, held last Monday at the house of Mrs. E. W. H. Bass, it was announced that the Vulture Fire Engine Company had given the Society, in furtherance of its work, the sum of $66.85. This was the net proceeds of a ball gotten up voluntarily for this object. The members of the Charitable Society knew nothing about it till the money was placed in the hands of their treasurer; it was, therefore, a gracious and free-will offering to the oldest and the one unsectarian charitable aid society in Quincy. The Society accepts the gift with thanks. Job says: "There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen." In this case it cannot be the path of the poor, for as the wild birds of old fed the prophet by the brook Cherith, the Vultures of Quincy bring bread to the hungry.

The Quincy Charitable Society is doing an excellent and ever-extending work among the poor. It aims to assist the distressed for a short time, till they can help themselves. Thus it keeps from becoming paupers, and losing their self respect, many needy persons. Its visitors are vigilent, giving food and fuel, and, in special cases, medicine, where they will do the most good. They never enquire about the belief of the needy, only whether they are worthy. They take advantage of the conferences of the Associated Charities, and endeavor to inform themselves of the best methods of charitable work.

The Society is supported by members' fees and voluntary gifts, and I would take this occasion to remind citizens, who have not contributed the small amount which is the condition of membership, that the visitors are now making their annual collections.

D. M. WILSON, President.

Neponset.

A course of lectures have been held in the lecture room of the Unitarian Church for some weeks. On Monday last a very interesting illustrated lecture on astronomy was given by Prof. McIntire, of Wollaston Heights. The attendance was larger than usual.

Mr. G. W. Whitman of this village, an able and reliable officer of the Boston police force for the past ten years, left this village on Tuesday for Florida. He goes to take charge of a lumber mill for the Cypress Lumber Company.

Mr. H. W. Blanchard will speak in the course of free lectures next Monday evening, in the lecture room of the Unitarian Church in this village. Subject, "Reminiscences of thirty years in anti-slavery cause."

STILL GOOD. It is a curious and important fact that pieces of wire cable of the Fairmount Suspension Bridge recently taken down at Philadelphia, after being in use some forty years, were found to be fully equal in tenacity, elasticity, and ductility to the best wire of that size now in the market.

☞ William Hale, of Connecticut, worth $80,000, died Friday week, 60 years old. One week before he took cold; Sunday married a wife 23 years old; on Monday was taken with pneumonia; and Friday died. The widow was made rich.

☞ The town of Sharon has school funds amounting to $4910. These are invested and the income goes to support the schools. We are told that the net debt of the town, after deducting these school funds was less than $1000 on the 1st of January, notwithstanding there had been more than $7000 paid toward the new town house.

CONVENTION. The G. A. R. Department of Massachusetts held its convention in Boston recently and John D. Phillips of Canton was elected Commander. A banquet was served in Faneuil Hall, to which some five hundred comrades sat down.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5, 1884.

Though Congressional proceedings of the week were disjointed; the work done was of an unusually interesting and significant character. The death and obsequies of Representative Mackey of South Carolina, caused two adjournments and necessarily displaced the regular order of business. Then carefully outlined prognostications of political happenings turned surprisingly upon their authorities; again proving that nothing is so certain to occur as the unexpected. In the first place, the Sherman resolutions for an investigation of the Mississippi and Virginia massacres passed the Senate without rousing the partizan debate that was anticipated. An animated discussion was called forth, however, while the Senate was considering the bill for the relief of the Greeley Arctic expedition party, the point being on the advisability of leaving the amount to be expended to the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy. Senators McPherson and Saulsbury attacked Secretary Chandler, declaring he was interested in the bill, and Senator Hale defended him, indignantly denying the accusation.

Prohibition petitions were another feature of the Senate proceedings. Nearly a bushel of these petitions to abolish the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia were offered on Thursday. Every senator had a roll neatly done up and tied, containing names obtained in his State, and one after another they presented them.

In the House, the introduction of a resolution for the appointment of a committee of inquiry, to hear the evidence in charges of corruption, made by ex-Speaker Keifer, against correspondents, brought Mr. Keifer to his feet in a violent attack upon the representatives of the press. Gen. Boynton, who sat in the press gallery during Mr. Keifer's speech, was the direct target of denunciation, and the scene caused considerable excitement. The war against unearned land grants has fairly begun. The House has passed two rescinding bills, applying to lands granted to Mississippi and Alabama. When Chairman Cobb, of the committee on Public Lands, arose to report these bills, stating briefly that the lands which it was proposed to forfeit had not been earned by the companies, he was subjected to a cross-fire of interrogatories from members with interests at stake. The Republican side of the chamber was nearly deserted in the anxiety to hear or take part in the running debate going on around Mr. Cobb, while in the rear of the seats were a number of Senators from states interested in this or other bills, the presentation of which was expected. Justice Fields of the Supreme Court was a conspicuous figure in the crowd. The first regular speech in opposition to the bill was by Mr. Van Eaton of Mississippi; and his colleagues, Messrs. Barkdale and Singleton, followed him. It is understood the next grants to be forfeited will be the Oregon and California, and then the unearned portions of the Northern Pacific. In the discussion among members of the House upon the question of voting themselves clerks, the argument that Southern members do not need secretaries is frequently advanced. Much of the correspondence of Congressmen relates to pensions, a subject which the constituents of Southern members are not interested, and therefore it is thought a proposition to provide members with clerks at public expense could not go through the house, as many Republicans, and probably more than three-fourths of the Democrats would vote against it.

Friday ended the discussion in the House on the Fitz John Porter relief bill. It passed that body by a majority vote of one hundred and six. During the debate, enemies of the measure had suggested that Southern members had no right to act in the matter, but when a vote was reached, ex-confederate Congressmen raised their voices in favor of the re-instatement of Gen. Porter. Among the last speakers who advocated the bill were Messrs. Wolford, Phelps, and Curtin, the latter the ex-war-Governor of Pennsylvania, closing the debate with a circle of applauding members around him. The galleries were crowded, attentive, and seemed to be in complete sympathy with Gen. Porter, who, as heretofore, during the discussion of his case, sat in the gallery.

The tariff contest opened in the House, Monday, preceded by a preliminary skirmish over free wool; th Ohio Delegation having been instructed by the Legislature of that State to use strong efforts towards a restoration of the duty on that article. The introduction of Mr. Morrison's tariff bill followed this dissension. ADAMS.

THE LARGEST PHOTOGRAPH. The largest photograph in the world, representing a commandery of Knights Templar of Rochester, is on exhibition at New York. It is four and one-half feet high, ten an one-half feet long, and weighs with frame and glass six hundred pounds. It makes a great stride in the way of improvement in the photograph art.

☞ Insurance Commissioner Tarbox warns holders of Charter Oak life insurance policies not to surrender them for less than their real value, because the company is solvent and able to meet their obligations.

Letter from New York City.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1884.

FALL RIVER STRIKE.

Pitiable as their condition really is, it seems under existing circumstances ill-advised and unfortunate that the cotton operatives of Fall River should commence a strike at this time. They confess themselves poor and unable to long hold out. They cannot expect much aid from other organizations as poor, or poorer than themselves. The market, always slack at this season, is exceptionally dull now, and there is no likelihood that the manufacturers will accede to their terms. The results of recent strikes have been unsatisfactory and yet in these odds they "go out." Undoubtedly they have a right to do so, and are entitled to our sympathy, although apparently, the only outcome, should they persist, will be present suffering and ultimate defeat.

POLITICAL.

Locally, as generally, the political horizon is extremely hazy. Four years ago, by this time the party managers had their machinery well oiled up and in motion. Local factions had decided on their man, and were working up their presidential booms. This year things drag, and each side is at its wits ends, and seem induced to wait till the last moment before beginning active work. Party policy is indefinate and interchangeable,—factions of both parties trumpeting the issues of the other, while the independent element is increasing. In the absence of any well-defined issues, the political engineers will count much on the personal record and popularity of their candidate to catch the independent vote. Both sides have talked up several good men who have strong local followings, but no universal favorites. The present bids fair to be a biographical campaign of unusual vigor.

PERSONAL.

General Grant, who has been suffering from an accident received during the holidays, is slowly recovering.

General Winfield Scott Hancock has just returned from a three months' trip in the South and West much improved in health and more than disgusted with newspaper reporters. He is reticent on political subjects. F. R. L.

Everything is Cheaper.

From all parts of the country comes the story of "cutting down." Everywhere and in all branches of business wages are being reduced and wherever possible production is being curtailed because there are more goods offered than the market will take. One way of putting it is to say that we are overproducing; another way is to say that the means of purchasing are diminished. One way is as nearly correct as the other because the question is a relative one. But there is this difference in the situation from that which is usual; viz., that the country is as largely overstocked with money as it is with goods. Not "fiat" money or promises to pay, but solid gold and silver; by the hundred thousand, by the million, by the cord, by the ton. It certainly is an odd state of affairs that we not only have more food than we can consume, more clothes than we can wear, more fuel than we can burn, and more houses than we can occupy, but that we have more money than we can use. As to the slackness of business, that is only what is usual at this time of year; the winter and holiday trade is over, the spring season has not yet opened, and the quiet is neither unusual nor ominous. As to reduction in the nominal rate of wages, it is not in excess of the reduction in the cost of necessaries. Nearly everything belonging to this class is about fifteen per cent. cheaper than it was on the first of January, 1882. The truth is that we have passed through one of our periodical panics without knowing it.—Boston Beacon.

☞ The city of Holyoke has increased circus-licenses from $200 to $500 on account of the money which these shows take out of town with them, the injury they are supposed to do to the merchants, and the class of people they bring with them.

☞ The Nantasket Beach Railroad Company recently petitioned the Railroad Commissioners to be exempted from fencing in its track. An amicable settlement between the railroad company and opposing parties having been made, the board granted the petition.

☞ Furniture, some idea of the extent of this branch of business as now carried on in Boston, can be obtained by visiting the warerooms at Paine's manufactory on Canal street, Boston. This is one of the largest in the country, with show rooms, covering acres of floor-room, stocked with every variety of house furniture, at manufacturers' and importers' prices, which save about one-third the retail price to their customers.

Do Thy Little.

Do thy little—God has made
Million leaves for forest shade—
Smallest stars that glory bring.
God employeth everything.
Then the little thou hast done—
Little battles thou hast won;
Little masteries achieved.
Little wants with care relieved,
Little words in love expressed,
Little wrongs at once confessed,
Little favors kindly done,
Little toils thou didst not shun,
Little graces meekly worn,
Little slights with patience borne—
Those shall crown thy pillowed head,
Holy light upon thee shed.
Those are treasures that shall rise
Far beyond the smiling skies.

Farm and Garden.

Good Men Make Good Horses.

We saw a farmer the other day with a fine looking team passing our residence. One of the horses in his team had a familiar look. Halting the farmer, we said, on looking closely at his horses: "Why, your off horse is the counterpart of neighbor ——'s balky horse—the one he had so much trouble with a year or two ago." "Why," said the farmer, "this is the same animal. After a few days I never had any trouble with him." "How did you break the balky creature?" "By kindness," retorted the farmer; "the same way that I have broke lots of other horses in my lifetime that were considered unsafe, either in saddle or harness." Well, this proves what some one said, that a horse in never vicious or intractable without a direct cause. If a horse is restive or timorous, you may be sure that these faults arise from defects in his education. He has been treated either awkwardly or brutally. Commence the education of a horse at his birth; accustom him to the presence, voice, and sight of man. Speak and act gently; caress him; all chastisement or cruelty confuses the animal and makes him wild. They are good men who make good horses. We do not now remember of ever seeing an uncertain, unsafe, balky horse belonging to a man of this character. They make the horse good.—Farmer's Tribune.

House Plants.

A lady, whose beautiful plants are the delight of her life and the envy of all her acquaintances, reveals the following secret of her success: The soil is about two-thirds good garden soil, and the rest is sand. It is kept light and loose about the roots; they are watered as they appear to need it, and not according to any particular rule; but the chief reason for their wonderful growth and bloom is this: When any of the leaves wither and fall, instead of picking them up and throwing them away, I make little rolls of them and tuck them down in the earth and let them decay; and this is the only fertilizer I have ever used. This," she added, "seems to be nature's way. And the plants that have the afternoon sun only, grow and rival those that have the morning sun.

The Highway.

A bill was reported by the committee on agriculture to prevent the growth of noxious weeds and the accumulation of rubbish in public highways. Each city and town shall cause all such weeds within its limits to be cut down once in June and once in August of each year. Whoever deposits in any public highway any wood, stones, brush, rubbish, or any unwholesome and unsightly substance, without the consent of the selectmen of the town, or of the mayor and aldermen, and refuses or neglects to remove them for five days after being requested by any person to do so, shall be liable to a fine of from $1 to $100 and costs. The same penalty is imposed on carrying off any soil from the highways.

Anecdotes.

"Ah! my good fellow, where have you been for a week back?"

"For a weak back? I'm not troubled with a weak back, I thank you."

"No, no! I mean where have you been so long back?"

"Long back! Don't call me long back, you villain!"

Doctor: "There, get that prescription filled and take a tablespoonful three times a day before meals."

Pauper patient: "But, doctor, I don't get but one meal in two days."

Some men who were pumping water from a vessel thought to be tight found that the water did not fall, after an hour's working. One of the laborers, an Irishman, on making an examination, found a hole near the stern, upon which he cried: "Shtop, boys! Sure ye'd pump the whole ocean away before the ship would float!"

A pert little girl in Troy boasted to one of her young friends that "her father kept a carriage."

"Ah, but," was the triumphant reply, "my father drives a street car."

A lady who was somewhat given to needless alarms concerning her health, and upon any slightest ailment found herself slipping into another world, took cold last week, and immediately concluded that at length her appointed hour had surely arrived.

"Georgy," she said, taking her four-year-old son upon her lap, "I'm going to die, Georgy, and you'll have a new mother sometime."

"Oh, well," philosophically returned the youngster, who inherits from his father a disposition quite the reverse of sentimental, and who had become somewhat accustomed to his mother's moods. "Oh, well, if there's nothing worse than that, I s'pose I can put up with that."

A Card.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Aug. 11, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—I have been troubled for the past two years with nervous headache, arising, I suppose, from dyspepsia, and also have had much pain in the region of my kidneys. I am pleased to inform you that after two weeks' use of your Red Jacket Bitters I am completely relieved of pain, and feel like a new man. While making this statement I will state further that my wife has for a long time been a great sufferer from menstrual prostration, sometimes being confined to bed a week at a time, and her menses, while very irregular, often every two weeks, would flow so profusely as to completely prostrate her. She has used but two bottles of your bitters, and taken no other medicine, and is to-day as regular and natural as any woman. It is solely due to the use of "Red Jacket Bitters."

Respectfully yours,

CHARLES HAURY,

No. 24 Prout street, New Haven, Conn.

For sale by all druggists.

Household Receipts.

Mr. Shirley Hibberd says in The London Gardners' Chronicle that several thicknesses of hot, dry white cloth laid over a dish of newly-cooked potatoes placed on the table will absorb moisture, prevent escape of heat, and promote "mealiness" for "a considerable length of time." On the other hand, shut with their own steam in closely covered earthenware vessels, the tubers soon become soggy.

FRUIT JUMBLES. One pound of sugar, one pound of butter, one pound and a quarter of flour, six eggs, half a pound of currants, a little soda and nutmeg. Mix the butter, sugar, spices and eggs, then the currants, next the soda, and lastly the flour.

RICH JUMBLES. Rub to a cream a pound of butter and a pound of sugar, mix with a pound and a half of flour, four eggs and a very little brandy, roll the cakes in powdered sugar, lay them on flat buttered tins, and bake in a quick oven.

This is a good dish: Fry one pound of veal in hot lard, having first cut in strips about two inches wide, and three or four long; when nearly done add a little butter and half a pint of oysters, chopped or cut in small pieces; season with pepper and salt; serve hot with or without toast.

A pretty dish for dessert is made by beating the whites of four eggs to a stiff froth, and then add gradually a cup of powdered sugar. Take the juice from a can of red raspberries, strain it, and color and flavor the eggs and sugar with it. Serve in glasses with cake or charlotte russe.

A slightly-damp cloth rubbed over a dusty carpet brightens it wonderfully and gathers all the dust. This is an excellent way to cleanse the floor of an invalid's room where noise and dust are objectionable.

A pretty cover for a small table can be made out of a square of dark brown felt. About the edge apply a double row of yellow felt daisies, stitching them on with yellow floss silk.

Take the blossoms of red clover and make a tea of them, and drink freely. It will cure cancer in the stomach, as well as on the surface.—Hearth and Home.

This and That.

☞ The power of love can transport a five-pound box of caramels twenty-five blocks before marriage, but after that it breaks down under as little as a gum drop.—Merchant-Traveler.

☞ "Your father is entirely bald now, isn't he?" said an Austin man to the son of a millionaire. "Yes," replied the youth, sadly, "I'm the only heir he has left."—Texas Siftings

☞ "Wise man, that Christopher Columbus," said Mrs. Partington to a Chicago lady. "I don't think so," was the reply. "Why! didn't he discover America, didn't he come over in the Cauliflower and plant his feet on Plymouth Rock? Of course he did. Ain't that something great?" "No," said the lady, "most any fool could discover America. I don't see how anybody could sail by America without discovering it."

☞ Snipkins refused to get his wife a new hat; soon after his little girl came in and said: Mamma, won't you buy me a monkey to play with when you go down town?" "No, darling—wait till you are older, and then marry one, as I did," replied the grief-stricken wife, her tears bursting forth afresh.

☞ When looking into your friend's album never make any remarks about a picture until you know who the original is. If you laugh at it, it will be sure to be a near relative, and if you praise, it will turn out to be your friend's pet jealousy.

Conundrums.

Why is the bridegroom more expensive than the bride?—The bride is always given away, but the bridegroom is often sold.

What is the most deceiving age?—The Saus-age.

On what food should a prize-fighter train?—Mussels.

Why is a man with a scolding wife like a florist?—He has a hot-house.

Why is an ill-fed dog like a philosopher?—He is a thin cur (thinker).

Why is a fool in high station like a man in a balloon?—Everybody appears little to him and he appears little to everybody.

Fashion Notes.

Rubies and diamonds are now worn by brides.

Ear-rings are made to fit the ears closely.

Among articles of jewelry are buckles of Rhine pebbles.

Circle cloaks of every description remain in high favor.

Feather borders are used on the skirts of dresses as well as cloaks.

Very pretty evening silks have spots or narrow stripes of gold thread.

Gray continues to be the favorite color for hats as the season advances.

Gold and silver is introduced into braids used for trimming winter costumes.

New felt hats are, in general, high crowned, with narrow brim, and trimming all on one side.

Among the rich materials there is a rage for brocaded ottoman silks with fruit and flower designs.

The evening cloak par excellence is of cashmere lined with plush, and having a crape hood trimmed with lace.

The hair is worn in a bow quite at the top of the head, and jewels, strass stones, or feathers are its only ornaments.

Pretty Parisian copotes are made of velvet applique on colored lace, with a bunch of velvet flowers on one side.

Ermine, once the most aristocratic of furs, fit for kings and queens, is now used only as a simple lining to plain cloaks.

For street wear some of the Parisian milliners have brought out exquisite little Fanchon-like bonnets of gray Swedish kid.

Dinner dresses are very quiet in color, and grays and lilacs, brown and dark reds, are much more worn than lighter tints.

Grays of several tones in one costume are the most fashionable hues for day dresses. Gray cashmere with gray embossed velvet and chinchilla fur combine many clear shades of this fashionable color.

Miscellany.

"Der Clothing Peesness."

When the tax assessor for one of the wards in Nashville called upon a clothing dealer the other day and asked about the value of his stock Isaac replied:

"Vhell, shust about $400."

"Four hundred! Why you must have at least $2000 invested here."

"Oh! no! no! vhas you eafer in der clothing peesness?"

"No."

"Vhell, it vhas surprising what a show $100 make. Four hundred vhas enough to start a mammoth clothing house."

"When do you inventory?"

"Vhell, aboudt six weeks ago."

"Didn't that inventory show over $3000 stock?"

"Oh, yes, yes; but let me explain to you. We took that inventory to sell out de peesness to a man from New York, and I borrowed 200 goats and 400 wests of my brud-Shacop to fill oop der stock. Der man didn't bite, und so I falls pack on my true stock. If I have more ash $400 here to you think I didn't get more ash $2000 insurance."

An Honest Man's Dilemma.

A stranger who had made a purchase of a second-hand dealer on Chatham street grew confidential and said he would like some advice.

"Vell, go aheadt."

"If you were in my place and wanted to go into business here, would you lend your money and live on the interest or would you go into the second-hand clothing business?"

"My frent," replied the other with a very serious look on his face, "let me tole you shust like a fadder. Doen' go into the second-hand business yourself, but lend me your money and become a silent partner."

"Are the profits large?"

"Large? How much do you think I made on dat west I sold you for $2? I made shust twelve shillings."

"Not by a blamed sight, for I haven't paid for it, and won't take it!" exclaimed the stranger, as he dropped the bundle and walked out.

"Vell, vell!" sighed Moses, as he looked after him, "efery times I tell der truth I lose a customer. How can an honest man make a living in New York?"

The Bartholdi Statue.

The great Bartholdi statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, presented by the French people to the American people, and destined to stand on Bedloe's island in New York harbor, is completed, and towers above all the surrounding buildings in Paris. No structure near the foundry in the yard of which it has been erected at all approaches it in height, and from the waist upward it is visible from a large area of the city. Visitors who enter at the door in Liberty's right heel can now ascend the ladders through the labyrinth of trusses until they reach the narrow stairway in the uplifted arm.

Needed a Chapel.

Not long ago a Chicago ex-Congressman looking over a new house an editor was building, who took great delight in showing him around and pointing out the features of the structure.

"This is the dining-room," said he; "this is the drawing-room, and this is the library. Here is the billiard-room, and there is the chapel!"

"What do you want of a chapel?" was asked.

"I guess I need a chapel as much as a billiard-room," quietly observed the editor."

"Well, I guess you do," solemnly responded the politician.

The Young Wife.

The marriage of middle age is companionship; the second marriage of maturity, perhaps the reparation of a mistake, perhaps the pallid transcript of a buried joy; but the marriage of the loving youth is by the direct blessing of God, and is the realization of the complete ideal of a lovely human life. Let those who have found that pearl hold it fast and keep it safe. Within the doors where love dwells no evil thing should enter; and the loving bride who would be the happy wife must specially guard against her own impatience and despair when the lover is merging into the husband, the flatterer into the friend.

☞ A lady and gentleman accidentally touched each other's feet under the table. "Secret telegraphy," said he. "Communion of soles," said she.—Worcester Spy.

☞ The Cambridge Tribune, in speaking of the Suburban Press Association, says: This association was organized for work, and its members are determined to arouse a spirit of aggressiveness which shall give to weekly journalism a power which it never has possessed. There will be rattling among the dry bones which the daily press may well take cognizance of. The wheels are moving.

☞ A plan to abolish the pension agencies throughout the country, and to pay the pensions by checks on the National Treasury, is now being a good deal discussed at Washington.

☞ An old darkey was endeavoring to explain his unfortunate condition: "You see," remarked Sambo, "it was in this way, as far as I can remember: Fust my fader died, den my mudder married agin; and den my mudder died, and my fader married agin; and somehow I doesn't seem to hab no parents at all, nor no home, no, nuffin."

☞ An innocent man has written a poem describing his anguish when sleeping under a crazy quilt. He asserts that all kinds of garments appeared before him and tried to snatch away the small fragments of themselves which went to make up the quilt, whereas had his vision been truthful, it would have revealed an army of dry-goods salesmen crying, "Give me back those patterns."

Rough or Chapped Hands can be instantly cured by Pearl's White Glycerine. Its application does not hinder the immediate use of a glove as it penetrates the skin, making it soft and pliable. It does not leave a disagreeable, greasy substance on the skin, like other similar preparations.

NO CURE! NO PAY.

DR. LAWRENCE'S COUGH BALSAM.

is warranted to cure COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, SORE THROAT, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

We do not claim to cure consumption when thoroughly seated, but we do claim that thousands of lives might be saved every year by the timely use of Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam.

Many people imagine they have consumption when in reality they only have a bad cold, which can easily be cured by proper care and the right kind of medicine. We could fill columns with testimonials, but do not believe in that way of advertising, our idea is to let everybody that is afflicted with a cough try for themselves, and is not perfectly satisfied, return the empty bottle of the dealer of whom it was bought and receive their money back.

Desires.

What are these wishings, all these vain desires,
These achings, hopings, inward fires,
That beat the deepest waters of our soul,
And o'er its crystal depths dark billows roll?
Can you tell what haunts us day and night?
Veiled are our eyes, and dim our spirit's sight.

We cannot reach the path we long to tread,
'Tis covered o'er with clouds; the mystic web
That hides it from our view we cannot raise,
And down its shadowed walk we may not gaze.
Can you tell me, if the path I may not gain,
Must silence through its portals always reign.

We know there's beauty blossoming all along,
Pure purling rills, and sweetest strains of song;
We catch the far-off music in our soul,
And long to burst these binding cords' control.
Can we never sing the glorious songs,
Our lips ne'er breathe for what our hearts so long.

Our struggling feet seem bound with iron bands,
We wildly strive to unclasp unseen hands,
Our throbbing heart is waiting to be free,
That we may soar away in perfect liberty.
Shall these fetters always hold us to the earth,
Or we be born again, a heavenly birth.

The dew-drop sparkles on the bending bough,
And trembling falls upon our aching brows.
It seems like angels' lips upon us pressed,
Sweet voices softly whisper, "Christ is rest."
In God's own time the clouds will roll away,
And we shall walk the path in endless day.

MAY LOVEJOY.

The Wrong Sunday.

It was very quiet at the old farm. For the first time in their lives the young people, four grown up girls, had gone away together to stay a week. At home, they generally kept things astir, in the way of fun and frolic, from morning till night. "Something ought to happen," they said to each other, "when father and mother are left alone, something funny." "Look out, father," cried Bessie, gaily, as they were leaving. "Keep hold of the almanac, or you may lose the days of the week."

So Deacon Stearns and Mrs. Stearns settled down for a quiet spell. They could hardly remember that such a time ever came to them before. Even the hired man had gone home. The deacon remarked, "Wife, I'll finish that history, and add up my yearly accounts. We shan't have such a racket now."

She replied: I'll finish drawing in my mat. There'll be time to turn off a good many things."

This was Tuesday. On Wednesday he said: "It beats all how we miss those girls. How do you stand it, mother? I believe it's going to snow."

Her answer was: "Well, I think women have so many things to do, they don't mind being lonely as much as men. If the children only get back safe it's all I'll ask."

The storm came on the Thursday, fast and furious, with raging winds, piling up huge drifts, and rolling along banks for children to tunnel. Inside, everything was peaceful in the dear old sitting-room, and so still. The deacon heaped up the wood in the open fire-place, where the flames roared, as if to show that the elements in-doors were equal to those without. Then, he went to sleep over his accounts and she nodded over her mat. The old dog looked around occasionally to see if they were still alive; and the cat sat up and washed her face, in order to keep something moving. Thus the short day wore on to another night.

Nor is it to be wondered at that, with the quiet and the storm, and the going to bed early, somehow this worthy couple lost a day, and awoke next morning with the firm conviction that it was Saturday instead of Friday.

"Well, I forgot to put my beans to soak last night," said Mrs. Stearns; "but I suppose I can boil them longer this morning."

"And I must look out for the brick oven and see to the fireplace logs for over Sunday," said Deacon Stearns, as he unlocked the door.

At night it was still snowing; but the Sunday baking was all in, and ready to come out hot the next morning—the beans, brown bread, and the sweet apple pudding. Besides, there were a whole pan of apple puffs, brown and flaky, in the pantry, a jar of doughnuts, and oak-leafed cookies.

The next morning was clear and cold. The sun shone, and the snow was deep and smooth. No one had appeared in the street to dissipate their notion that it was Sunday.

"Wife," said the deacon, as he came in to breakfast, "the snow is pretty deep, and the drifts will be high below Mace's. What do you say to staying at home from meeting to-day? Can't we manage to keep Sunday by ourselves?"

Now the deacon's wife was one of the best women in the world, but she did like, sometimes, a quiet Sunday at home. Being very conscientious, she seldom allowed herself such a luxury. Her face wore a smile of satisfaction as she spoke.

"It would be hard for the horse to stand out. Didn't he get a little lame the other day? I hope we shan't set a bad example to our new neighbors, but do as you think best, husband."

Toward noon she took her Bible and sat down at the south window. She could hardly believe her eyes. There went by a load of wood, and another, and still another.

"Taking advantage of this snow for sledding; what a shame! It looks like Mr. Foster's man, too."

Then came a knock at the door. A man asked for something to eat. The deacon was in the barn, but she would not refuse a meal and shelter. "Besides," she thought, "I can talk to him about keeping Sunday."

She seated him by the kitchen fire, with a plate of provisions and a cup of hot coffee.

"Are you traveling far?"

"Just up from down below, looking for work."

"You don't look for work Sunday, I hope."

"Well, I don't know what I'll do to-morrow. Guess I'll wait till Sunday comes."

"Poor heathen," she said to herself, "if I could only give him some instruction."

"We are staying at home from meeting to-day, but we usually go. If you are able to walk in this snow, when you get into the city you will find a church on the right hand side, this very road straight ahead. You may get right into our pew, tell the sexton Deacon Stearn's. Your clothes are good. You mustn't go about on the Sabbath Day if you would prosper."

She rose and looked steadily at him, to make her remarks effective.

The man stared, then got up. "I thank ye, marm; your food was good and hot. I guess you're all right, if you are a little fuddled in mind."

She was too indignant to utter a word, and the man stepped out.

The deacon met him in the door-yard, and he said to himself: "Good chance to say a word to this man."

But when he began, the tramp actually burst out laughing, and turned away. The deacon watched him with growing displeasure. He went a few steps, turned around and looked at the house, and seemed to be overcome with mirth.

Another knock at the door of the kitchen. There stood a little girl, one of the new neighbor's children.

"Please, ma'am, will you lend my mother a frying pan? She's cracked hers, and we cannot get another to-day."

"Of course you can't, my child. We're not heathens in this town. Yes, you may take it; but come in and sit by the fire." "For," she said to herself, "perhaps this is another chance; and there's more hope for children."

She brought out two nice apple puffs on a pretty plate, and began: "Do you know your commandments?"

"Yes, ma'am, some of them."

"Will you say one after me? Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

The child ate her pies, regarding her questioner with an amazed look that convinced Mrs. Stearns that she had been well taught. She proceeded to enlarge:

"My dear, I don't blame your mother for not sending you to Sunday school to-day, the snow is so deep; but you must be careful when you go home about playing, for that would be very wicked."

Still eyeing her doubtfully, the child departed.

The teams of wood went by at intervals through the afternoon. They talked the subject over, as, later, they sat by the dying embers.

"I don't know what this land is coming to," said the deacon. "It will get to be another Sodom."

"And I've made up my mind," said Mrs. Stearns, sorrowfully, "that I won't stay at home from meeting again. It may be judgment upon me. I do hope I've done some good, though, to-day."

"Well, that was a funny fellow you fed," returned the deacon. "Why, he actually laughed in my face, and then winked."

At six the next morning, she was up and at her washing, and he went to his usual work.

As the sleighing was good, and none of the family were present at church, the deacon's nephew thought he'd ride down and see if they were sick. Fastening his horse, he heard the sound of the deacon's axe and made his way to the shed, but was never more surprised in his life. "Why Uncle Stearns! working Sunday!"

"Tain't Sunday," said the deacon, pausing with uplifted arm.

"Ain't Sunday! Why, I've just come from meeting. Thought you must all be sick."

"I tell you yesterday was Sunday and mother and I kept it at home."

The nephew leaned against the work bench for support, as the truth dawned upon him.

Thr deacon threw down his axe, and started for house. Mrs. Stearns, her clothes all out, was taking up the dinner."

"Mother, what day is it?"

"Why, it's Monday, father. What do you mean?"

"Here's Ben, and he says that it is Sunday."

"Sunday! Ben are you crazy?" and she sank down on the sofa.

Ben had a hard time proving the truth of his statement; but when he finally succeeded, she drew on her hood and mittens.

"Clothes shan't dry on Sunday, anyway."

"Mother, I'd let 'em alone. It will be just as bad if you take them down."

"Mr. Stearns, I never could enjoy wearing them again, never." And she brought them back into the tubs.

"To think that Mr. Foster's men should have gone by this morning and seen me putting them out. Well, it will be a lesson to me never to judge anybody again."

"I guess it will be overlooked, wife," said the deacon, seeing how seriously she was taking it. "I'll harness up and we'll go to meeting this afternoon."

They went without their usual supper, in order to avoid any more work, and concluded that the mistake was owing to the storm without and the stillness within.

As for Ben, he laughed all the way home, and he laughed for years after; and so did the girls, when they thought of it.

New York Cars.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8, 1884.

In this stinging cold weather, one in going around the city a great deal, naturally tries to look out for the most comfortable mode of conveyance, and a short sketch of some of the various experiences which I have encountered in this local traveling may be interesting.

At the Post Office, a car may be found starting for almost any part of the city north; and among the multitude of those which crowd that point the favorites are those which are heated, such as run on the Third avenue surface and elevated lines. None of the horse cars which cluster in City Hall Square go down town any farther than the Post Office; consequently on cold mornings, however biting the blast, one has to wait until the particular car which he wishes to take has reached the end of the line, and has had its horses changed for the return trip, before he can get comfortably aboard. There is however, one objection to these heated horse cars, owing to the locality through which the first part of their uptown trip is made; namely, the class of people who ride in them. Pretty hard looking characters some of them are,—men and women of almost all nationalities, bare-headed and dirty—the women with no outer covering except an occasional shawl thrown carelessly over their shoulders; the men,—peddling Jews, German saloon-keepers or frequenters, Italian glaziers, newly arrived emigrants, and what not?

One interesting feature of these Third avenue cars is the small coal stove which is used for heating them. Each one is set in a sort of a box on one side of the car at about the centre, with a short pipe extending up through the roof, and with wire across the front of the stove to keep the coals from falling out, or the passengers from falling in. And then, every little while the conductor comes around and pries away some passenger's feet, to get a shovelful of coal to put on the fire. However, these little stoves take the icy chill off the air, and people can make themselves at least partially comfortable for a ride of two or three miles.

These heated cars, unfortunately, run only upon one line, and in order to get across town, one must jump into one of the little "bob-tails," with its single skeleton horse, it's automatically closing door, and it's five cent fare box. Connected with this is a dismal sounding bell-punch, upon which the surly driver exercises his muscle and the patience of the half frozen occupants of the car. Without question a ride in one of these boxes in winter is almost intolerable, and the bob-tail car, the death of horses and the bane of local travelers, will doubtless succumb before very long to public opinion. It is interesting, too, after having waited ten minutes on a cold corner for one of these refrigerators, to be met by the driver, as you hail him to stop the car, with the chilling request to "take the next car, for this one's full!" and to see him drive on, with the prospect of a similar experience in another ten minutes.

The old saying that there is compensation in all things is hardly verified in the case of the lines whose cars run through narrow streets, for there is always sure to be a "block" two or three times within a ride of eight or ten squares. Then it is anything but pleasant to sit shivering in the cold, while the driver and conductor stand calmly and stolidly looking on while a half dozen huge, heavily loaded trucks fill up the narrow thoroughfare in front, with a long procession of cars and teams in the rear. If the driver or conductor does move, it is to get off and help the angry truckmen swear at their horses and each other. However, these gentlemen make up for lost time when the jam is once broken, and the passengers just escape final coagulation.

To a stranger in New York a ride in the Fourth avenue cars, through the tunnel, is somewhat of a novelty. This tunnel is eight or ten blocks in length, and opens out just opposite the Grand Central Railroad Station. It is built through the centre of a broad, beautiful street, with manholes opening to the surface at short distances apart. The spaces between and around these ventilators are enclosed by railings, and in summer they are kept full of flowers and shrubs, giving the street a very inviting appearance.

I cannot here refrain from speaking in this connection of the poor, much maligned, and often-times but apparently half-human horse car driver. Muffled in winter from head to foot in a huge ulster, his hands covered with immense glove, which make them look like the paws of some great animal, the car driver whips and shouts at his overworked horses from early morning till late at night. Nothing breaks the monotony of his existence except an occasional jam of wagons, or perhaps a midnight assault from a band of ruffians, who do not scruple to knock him over the head if they can thus get at the solitary passenger and rob him of a few cents and his watch. Such occurrences as this take place most frequently on the West street line, which runs from the South Ferry to Central Park along the North river. Truly the office of car driver is anything but a sinecure.

After the horse-car comes the Broadway stage. There is probably nothing else just like it in the world. It is, in fact, a unique institution, and deserves mention in a sketch like this, for it takes a prominent part in the transportation of New Yorkers about the city. That, also, is little else than an ice-box, but the shaking which one gets in the course of a half-hour's ride in a "'bus" is almost enough in itself to set one's blood in circulation. And what with this jolting, and the signs about the stage warning all to "beware of pickpockets," and with the driver calling for his fare, there is not much chance to think of being cold, especially if a lady happens to get into the vehicle and takes your politely proffered seat, without so much as a "thank you." About the most lively and exciting kind of riding of which I know is this traveling in a Broadway stage.

Besides the various kinds of surface conveyances are the elevated lines, three or four of which run parallel nearly the whole length of the island. A hasty climb up a long flight of stairs, an exchange of a dime or a half a dime for a bit of pasteboard, a puff, and a slamming of gates, and you are aboard the cars, flying away to the next station, four or five blocks distant. The elevated cars are supposed to be heated but they only are when the weather is mild, being nearly without warmth on the coldest days. Nevertheless, they are the most convenient mode of modern transportation, and it is said over ninety-two millions of people ride on the various lines every year.

One more, and then I am done. At the City Hall terminus of the Third avenue "L.," two large hands point at right angles to the street across the East river, with the words, "To the cars. Fare 5 cents," painted upon them. This is the entrance to the great bridge, and the signs refer to the cable road. After paying the fare an easy ascent of a few steps brings one the upper platform, where the train of two cars has been shifted into position by the dummy. There you get aboard for a ride of the most novel description. In fact the motion is more like sliding than rolling, and is a very pleasant sensation. Various devices have recently been tried for warming these cars, and by this time a choice has doubtless been made between them. The mile's ride across the river is well worth the five cents, and I know of no more delightful way of ending a day of pleasure about New York than by taking a tour of the bridge by the cable road.

How to Keep Dry.

All boys who are natural and healthy enjoy being out in the snow. The deeper the drifts are, the more fun it is. How to keep their feet dry has been the great problem with me. Within the last few years I have tried every arrangement. Rubbers, and rubber-leggings, greased leather boots, shoes and rubbers, with long stockings drawn on over all—every way that can be conceived of—all to no purpose. My boys always came in thoroughly wet through—feet, legs, and even their merino underdrawers and trowsers. At last, however, with the beginning of the new year, 1884, I have mastered the perplexing problem, and my plan has proved such a success in every way, and it is so simple, that I long to have others try it and realize the comfort that I do.

Take a straight piece of dark flannel, or any woollen material, about a quarter of a yard wide, and long enough to hem around the boot, on to the inside lining at the top. Then close up the back seam of the flannel and finish at the top with a hem, into which is run a piece of elastic, like a garter. This piece, or bag, is to draw up over the trousers leg, keeping not only the trousers perfectly dry, but entirely preventing any snow from getting into the leg of the boot. This plan is so simple and so perfectly satisfactory that to all who have small boys I say only try it.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Funny Verdicts.

An Indian jury recently returned a written verdict of "Blode to pieces bi the biler bustin."

A Kansas jury gave the following verdict in a case where a man died in a state of intoxication: "Death by hanging—round a rum shop."

"Jury," said a western judge, "you kin go out and find a verdict. If you can't find one of your own, get the one the last jury used." The jury returned with a verdict of "suicide in the ninth degree."

A Rhode Island jury were five days debating on a hog case involving $7, and then came in, found the hog not guilty, recommended both plaintiff and defendant to the mercy of the court.

A Pekin, Ill., coroner's jury rendered a very singular verdict, that a man whose body was found in the river came to his death by a blow on the head, "which was given either before or after the drowning."

A Minister's Story.

In his first sermon to his new congregation in Brooklyn, the Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, ex-Congressman, told the following story about a tract: "There is in this town," said he, "a friend of mine who had both his feet shot away in the late war. As he lay on his straw pallet a woman approached him with a bundle. The sufferer hoped she would speak to him and give of the oranges, which he thought must assuredly be in the bundle, to slack his thirst. She bent over him and asked this question: 'Are you prepared to die?' Asked this of him who lay there hoping to live to bring back to Brooklyn so much of himself as had not been hacked and cut away. When she had asked this question she slowly untied her bundle. It contained tracts. She was distributing tracts. And that was not all. Corporal Tanner, the sufferer, added: 'When I looked upon the tract it was the sin of dancing. I feebly called her back and told her I was converted, for I would never dance again.'"

☞ "So you prefer my medicines to those of Dr. Pillsbury?" Mrs. Mulligan: "Och, indade, docthor dear, ye're a dale better than th' other ould humbug."

Printers' Errors.

Somebody writes as follows to the Christian World, of London: "In your last I saw what, I regret to say, is common to nearly every newspaper,—more than one correction of errata, accompanied with the remark, (now stereotyped) "printer's error." I trust I may not be considered presumptuous in saying a word against the now great army of typographists, whose apparent ignorance is frequently exposed in public. One error pointed out in your last issue was that of a reverend gentleman whose name had been printed 'Lemon' instead of 'Semon. If in such a case as this, the original copy was referred to, the capital letter would, no doubt, be found written so much like an 'L,' that no compositor, unless he was a veritable English dictionary to himself, would have been able to distinguish the difference. More correct would it be to say, not 'printer's error,' but author's illegibility.' Some writers literally take Mark Twain's sarcastic advice, 'don't write too plainly. Avoid all painstaking with proper names. We know the full name of every man, woman and child in the United States.' Then, too, some of our authors pander to the practice of quoting foreign languages. The writers may know several languages; but they ought not to expect that the compositors are linguists, or they have received a collegiate education. Some have, by dint of their own perseverence acquired a knowledge of some of the living and dead tongues; but this ought not to be presumed as a rule. If a Latin or a French quotation be misprinted, the ignorance of the printer is paraded before the public. It is not, sir, as you can testify, that the average printer cannot produce the author's mind; the fact is that too many of our gifted writers cannot write. They scribble; and what is usually of the greatest importance is indicated in the proverbial spider and ink style. Whatever be the subject of his author, whether linguistical, scientific, argumentative, theological, political, social or economical, the printer is expected to understand it all; for unless he understands it, it may be full of 'printer's errors.' But, besides this, he has often literally to translate, by tedious deciphering, the handwriting placed before him, and this is sometimes as difficult an art as to make out the hieroglyphics of Cleopatra's needle. A word to the wise is sufficient. That word, Mr. Editor, I would respectfully suggest to authors, is: 'Hear the other side.' I will not trouble the compositor with the Latin."

The Young Emperor of China.

In January, 1875, the young emperor Tungchih, the only son and successor of Hienfung, whose life had closed fourteen years before, died of small-pox at Pekin, without leaving any child to succeed him on the Dragon throne. A family council was hurriedly summoned in one of the inner chambers of the palace, and, by the influence of the two empresses—the one the dowager empress and the other the empress mother, and both of them widows of the emperor Hienfung—the assembled conclave of Manchu princes came to an unanimous decision to proclaim Tsaitien, the infant son of Prince Chun, Emperor. The boy was sent for on the spot, and placed, "cross and sleepy as he was," in the middle of his uncles, by whom he was hailed and done homage to as the Hwangti. Thus was the critical question of the imperial succession decided after a single midnight conference, and the Manchu dynasty was continued without raising any internal discord, or exciting any external commotion. The reins of power remained in the hands of the two empress regents, and of Prince Kung, while the boy Tsaitien became the emperor Kwangsu, which means "Illustrious Succession."

Kwangsu was born August 15, 1871, and his father, Prince Chun, was the seventh son of the emperor Taukwang, and brother of Hienfung. Prince Chun had made himself notorious at the time of the Tientsin massacre as the leader of the anti-foreign party; but the immediate consequence of his son's elevation was not, as we would imagine, his acquiring some prominent official post, but his retirement altogether from public life, as "it was impossible that a father should pay homage to his son." It is probable that, but for this latter consideration, the son of Prince Kung would have been chosen for the imperial dignity; but it was felt that the empire could not spare either the good sense or the long experience of that minister.

A Seasonable Hint.

When about to take a long sleighride, make ready a piece of joist (of any kind of hard wood, such as housebuilders use,) the length of the sleigh-seat and twice the thickness of a common brick; heat it on the stove, or in the oven. It is surprising how very hot such a piece of wood will become without burning, and how very long it will retain heat. On such a seat, and covered with a buffalo robe, I have known people to ride seventy miles comfortably and the wood to be quite warm at the journey's end. A similar piece for the feet, at the same time tucked in from the wind, was delightful.

Another foot-warmer, more easily made ready and serving many purposes, is a bag of bed-ticking, fourteen inches square. Bind the seams, with braid or a strip of the ticking, leaving a small opening until filled with sand. Make a slip-cover for it, of any material you choose, or crochet of some bright color, and fasten with buttons and loops. When needed, heat very hot in the oven, put in its case, and it is ready for use.—Good Cheer.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, FEB. 16, 1884.

A SURPRISE. At a regular meeting of Clan McGregor, held at Revere Hall, on Wednesday evening, the clansmen were surprised by their lady friends. Business was immediately suspended and the ladies received with great enthusiasm. The Revere Hall proving too small, a committee was appointed to hire the Skating Rink, which was done. Dancing was then commenced and kept up until twelve o'clock, when all were invited into the Revere Hall to partake of a most magnificent supper; as the ladies came laden with the good things of this life. Considerable merriment was occasioned by the attempts of the clansmen to masticate the doughnuts inlaid with cotton batting. After a considerable number of songs by members and visitors, all again repaired to the rink and tripped the light fantastic toe until 3 A. M., when the party broke up; terminating a night's enjoyment long to be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

THE NEW LODGE. The Odd Fellows are pushing forward towards instituting. The date has not yet been decided on, but it will probably be an early one. The carpenters have nearly completed their labors in the hall; the frescoers are at work beautifying the walls; and the carpet and furniture are about ready to be put in. The hall is of good size, and when furnished as it is the intention it shall be, it will be one of the coziest and most beautiful in the State.

RUNAWAY. Last Monday morning as Dr. Donovan was about to enter his carriage in front of Robertson's block, the horse became restless and started to run, the doctor was thrown to the sidewalk, and the horse had it all his own way, and with Gilpin speed rushed up Hancock street. When near Mr. John Hall's building he collided with Mr. W. H. French's heavy wagon and completely demolished the doctor's buggy. With the exception of the carriage, no further damage was done.

PRESENTATION. Mr. John F. Desmond, the popular conductor on the East Milton branch of the Old Colony railroad, was the recipient, recently, of a nice gold watch from his friends in East Milton and West Quincy. The presentation was made by Mr. A. A. Brackett, and the watch was valued at $100.

SURPRISE PARTY. On Monday evening a party of ladies and gentlemen to the number of forty surprised Mrs. Joseph Walker on Water street. A most enjoyable time was spent with speeches, recitations and songs. About 12 o'clock they sat down to a most sumptuous supper, to which all did ample justice. At this point Mrs. Walker was presented with a magnificent parlor lamp of the latest design. The recipient accepted the present and thanked the donors in a neat felicitous speech. After this dancing was enjoyed until a pretty late hour, when the company dispersed with many happy wishes to Mrs Walker. All acknowledged that it was one of the most enjoyable events of the season.

DECEASED. Rev. Edmund Burke Whitney, a native of Quincy, died on Thursday, at his residence in Jamaica Plain. He was the youngest son of the late Rev. Peter Whitney, a former pastor of the Unitarian Church of this town. Early in life he went from his home in Quincy to Boston, where he spent some years in the gun establishment of William Read & Son, afterwards with George H. Gray & Co., hardware dealers; subsequently filling in succession the positions of secretary and president of the Franklin Insurance Company. The deceased was universally esteemed by those who met him in all the relations of life, for his admirable qualities and character. Mr. Whitney was a man of unblemished character and highest moral convictions. His life, though uneventful, was yet full of deeds of kindness and affection.

DARING ROBBERY. As Mr. Charles H. Batchelder, engineer at Messrs. Churchill & Hitchcock's granite works, was returning to his home early last Monday evening, he was assaulted by four men when near Messrs. Thomas & Owen's granite works, on Granite street, who overpowered and choked him until he was insensible, when they robbed him of his pocket-book, containing twenty-two dollars.

PROHIBITORY CONVENTION. The constitutional prohibitory convention which was held in the Tremont Temple, Boston, on Tuesday of last week, was attended by five hundred and thirty-seven delegates from the different temperance societies of the state. The collection of funds amounted to $4176. When the subscriptions languished, Mr. Faxon proposed to give $5 for every $5 subscription received until he should cry enough. It rained $5 bills, but Mr. Faxon did not flinch, and his subscription for the day reached more than $600. A lively campaign is promised this year, and legislative candidates will be supported or opposed on this issue.

State Legislature.

There has been a large number of petitions before the Legislature this week. Among them we noticed one by Wm. G. A. Pattee, Esq.,—that of Murray M. C. Chubbuck and others, for legislation to authorize the town of Quincy to pay each of five men who served in the quota of the town during the late war a bounty of $125.

A petition of W. L. Faxon and others was also presented by Mr. Pattee for a revision of taxation in Massachusetts.

A petition from Mr. Clark Swallow and eighty-three others from East Bridgewater, for the passage of a law to fix the time for Thanksgiving and Fast Day.

The Committee on Drainage reported leave to withdraw on the petition of John C. Randall and others, for incorporation for the purpose of providing a system of sewerage for the town of Quincy.

In the Senate, on Tuesday, a resolve providing for such an amendment to the constitution that state elections and sessions of the Legislature shall be held but once in two years was passed by a vote of 22 to 4. Hon. Wm. A. Hodges, of Quincy, voted in favor of the amendment.

Universalist Levee.

One of the best levees by the Universalist Society which has been the pleasure of our citizens to enjoy for some years, took place on Wednesday evening. Owing to the storm and awful traveling, the hall was not crowded,—between four and five hundred were present,—and all had a good opportunity to see, hear and enjoy themselves.

The dramatic entertainment by members of the Universalist Society of Hingham, was excellent, and received favorable comments on all sides. Seldom have we seen better performing by amateurs. They had their parts well learned and spoke up loud and distinct, so that they could be heard in all parts of the house. The audience were quiet and seemed to greatly enjoy both the drama and farce.

The music by Porter's band of Brockton was, as usual, the very best, and was much enjoyed between the parts of the entertainment, and by those who engaged in dancing. There was an abundance of room on the floor and the dancers had a good opportunity to have a jolly time.

Funeral Obsequies in Weymouth.

The funeral of the late Willard Keith Richards took place in Weymouth on Monday, Feb. 11th. After prayers at the residence of the deceased, at 1 P. M., the remains were conducted to the Union Congregational Church, by Delta Lodge, F. and A. M., and Weymouth Council, Royal Arcanum, under escort of South Shore Commandery, Knights Templar, Sir Edward W. H. Bass, eminent commander, accompanied by the Weymouth band.

The religious services were conducted by Rev. Lucien H. Frary, and were of a very impressive character, paying a fitting tribute to the moral worth and noble, genial bearing of the deceased, which was clearly shown by the very large number gathered, to pay their last tribute of respect. Music was furnished by a double quartette, Miss S. M. Blanchard, organist. The pulpit was decorated, and also the singers' seats and gallery, by the choir, of which the deceased was an esteemed member.

South Shore Commandery of Knight Templars contributed a red cross, with white background; Delta Lodge, a square and compass, with floral representation of the rising sun in the centre; Pentalpha R. A. Chapter a keystone composed of white pinks, surrounded by the usual symbolic letters. Weymouth Council, Royal Arcanum, a beautiful crown. There were numerous other floral offerings from friends and relatives.

At the conclusion of the religious services, the beautiful and impressive burial service of the same order was conducted by Worshipful Master Alden Bowditch, assisted by brother Charles C. Webster as chaplain. The remains were then conducted to the village cemetery.

WENDELL PHILLIPS. In the House at Washington last week Friday, Congressman Finerty of Chicago offered a resolution lamenting the death of Wendell Phillips. Its consideration at that time required unanimous consent, but Mr. Eaton of Connecticut objected. He gave as his reason that it was a preposterous proposition, in that "it related to a man who for the last twenty years opposed the government and maligned the constitution; a man who said the constitution was a league with the devil and a convenant with hell. It gave the sympathy of Congress to a man who fought his government, who refused to exercise the rights of citizenship, and who scorned its protection," and who "was as much responsible for the secession of the South as any one not actually among the seceders. He sought to disrupt the Union. He was glad when the South seceded. I don't see why we should pass a resolution regretting his death."

AN ELEPHANT ON HER HANDS. It is told of Mme. Sembrich that during her Boston visit she surprised a circle of friends who were calling upon her, by announcing with much show of pleasure that her husband had promised her a jumbo. The curious glances exchanged about her quickly convinced her that some error had been made, but she stoutly asserted that it was a jumbo that had been promised her, and that she intended to learn to play upon it. Some one suggested that she possibly meant a banjo, and the surprised singer joined in the laugh at the result attending her struggles with the vernacular.

☞ The country newspaper is fast becoming a power in the land. Its growth is steady and sure, and its influence is a potent factor in shaping public opinion and in elevating and giving a healthier and higher tone to truth, justice and morality. The man who takes the country journal regularly is generally progressive, well informed, and educated up to the times, and knows the value of the weekly journal, which, if well conducted, contains a large and varied amount of information of what is going on from week to week in town or county; so, if you are a wide awake, thorough-going, progressive individual you will endorse the country newspaper.

BIRTHDAY PARTY. Miss Mamie, daughter of Mr. William B. Rice, celebrated her tenth birthday at her father's residence, on Adams street, last Tuesday, by entertaining a number of her schoolmates and friends. The party assembled about four o'clock, and a general good time was enjoyed until eight, when the young friends separated for their respective homes. During the evening a bountiful collation was served, consisting of the dainty little dishes which please the little ones. Miss Mamie was the recipient of a number of beautiful presents.

Wollaston Items.

Having just returned from Montreal, where a few days have been spent very pleasantly, in witnessing the exciting sports of the Carnival season, I'm unable to give a full report of the doings and sayings of our section for the week past.

While making preparations for the journey northward, the question was fully considered whether or not, it would be for the best, to have our commission abrogated for a time, and request others whose knowledge is so great, as to the proper phrases to be used, in writing these little articles as well as on other occasions, to favor us by reporting in their way, the items of interest during our absence.

Anticipating however a week of pleasure, and hoping to find an opportunity to write a short article, giving an account of the festivities that were to fall to our lot, it was decided to lay the idea on the table for the present.

The K. & L. of H. royally entertained the officers of the Grand Lodge on Tuesday evening last, and the visitors departed, voting Woodbine Lodge one of the best in the State, certainly, if rumor is correct, they do take the lead in providing good suppers, and one of these days "Newport" hopes to be asked to send in an application.

By the way, we heard the following question asked in the train this morning, and it may not be out of place: "Why are the suppers of the K. and L. of H. called 'clapboard suppers?'" Why, because the gentlemen spruce up for them and the ladies pine for them. Sorry if it was one of the minstrel jokes.

The Oratorio Society gave one of their monthly concerts at Wollaston Hall on Wednesday evening, but owing to the unfavorable weather, the attendance was not so large as it should have been. The Society is making good progress and should receive encouragement from the residents, especially the musically inclined.

The second of the present course of dances will take place on Wednesday evening of the coming week, and as the others have been very enjoyable, the dancers, will no doubt find this one as lively as ever. It will be a "Calico."

The K. of H. boys are busy in disposing of the tickets for their minstrel entertainment which will be on the evenings of Feb. 29th and March 1st. We understand that the tickets are selling very rapidly, and so to be on the safe side "Newport" has the precious little "pasteboard" and will guard it carefully. NEWPORT.

Braintree Chips.

Among the new things here, is a grain store near Hollingsworth Mills.

The big shop near South depot will soon be a busy place. All kinds of trunks are to be manufactured; and even Barnum, the elephant man, can be supplied if he will send his order.

A large number of our young folks, and a good many older ones, attended the ball given by the O. C. R. R. Beneficial Association last week Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' Hall, Boston. The ball was a complete success.

The Methodist Society are getting ready to commence on their new church and will do so probably as soon as favorable weather will permit.

The G. A. R. Post held an assembly at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening. Smith & Fuller furnished the music.

Wonder if Mac remembers that little affair that was said to have happened between George Washington and the horse car conductor.

Mrs. E. S. Bradford is having a new house made from the old shop on the corner of Summer and Central streets. Huntress of Brockton makes the old look new. The building when done will make quite a convenient dwelling, and also be an ornament to the corner. A tenant has already engaged it.

We are all anticipating a great pleasure when we shall see the sun shine again, and are all willing to run the risk of being tanned if we can only see it shine as usual. D.

☞ The reports from the flooded districts along the Ohio river are sad indeed. The river shows no sign of retreating, and the statements received, brief though they are, appeal to the sympathies of all kind-hearted people. In addition to the sufferings incident to the flood they are now threatened with a cold wave, which will add to the terrors of the situation. It is estimated that at least thirty thousand people in the Ohio Valley, within a distance of twenty-five miles, will require assistance for the next two weeks.

STATUE TO WENDELL PHILLIPS. At the suggestion of a number of readers, the Boston Globe has opened a popular subscription list for a statue to the memory of Massachusetts' greatest orator, Wendell Phillips, to be erected at some prominent point on Boston Common, the subscriptions to be from the people, and in sums from one cent to five dollars. The Globe offers to be the custodian of the fund until a proper organization is effected and to acknowledge the same in its columns. Let the people generally contribute and a monument worthy of the man be raised to his memory.

Letter for New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13, 1884.

The real estate market is beginning to put on a brighter aspect than it has worn for several weeks past. There is an eager demand for offices and tenements, and purchasers of down town property are numerous, when anything really valuable is offered. The conveyances for January amounted to over three thousand dollars more than in January, 1883; while the recorded mortgages foot up nearly two thousand dollars less.

The rapid transit commissioners, who have been in session since last December, have just decided on the selection of some of the new routes proposed for elevated steam and cable roads about the city. If these selections are ever made practical, New York will exhibit a perfect net-work of roads, many of which will doubtless take the place of the present horse-car lines. The commissioners have yet sixty days in which to decide what sort of roads shall be constructed, to create a corporation and receive subscriptions. They are to receive under the act by which they were appointed, ten dollars a day and expenses, the amount to be paid out of the capital stock of the company to be formed.

The pay and hours of work of New York horse-car conductors are being agitated to a considerable degree. They now get but twenty-two cents for each round trip, but are allowed to run as many a day as they can; consequently they are worked very hard, as the majority of them will, for the extra few cents, work from 7 A. M. to 10.30 P. M., or later.

To show that justice is not altogether dead in New York, it is refreshing to notice the conviction of Billy McGlory, a noted sporting man who was lately arrested for allowing intoxicating liquors to be sold by his employes on his property without a license. He was sentenced to six months on the Island, notwithstanding much influence, and probably bribery, which was brought to bear in his behalf.

Last Monday a flock of blue-birds was seen over in New Jersey during a light fall of snow. They seemed to be searching for a place to alight, but everything was so covered with snow that they at last flew towards the South. These heralds of Spring seldom appear in this vicinity before the first of March, and will be gladly welcomed on their return. W. L. M.

MILTON. The forty-seventh annual town report has just been issued, and for the past year it gives the following statistics: Value of personal property; $8,284,012; real estate, $3,989,800; number of polls, 816, and the rate of taxation is $5 on $1000. The estimated appropriations for the expense of running the town are $58,150, of which $19,300 is for schools and $15,000 for the highway department. The death rate for the year 1883 is the smallest for the past twenty-five years. There were 38 marriages, 68 births and 60 deaths.

Charles Bronsden of Milton, was found dead in his barn by his daughter on Tuesday morning. He resided in Scott's Woods, and was a member of Co. F. 18th Massachusetts Infantry.

Boston Theatre.

The following complimentary notice of Miss Margaret Mather, who has been performing very successfully at the Boston Theatre, is from the pen of one of the oldest and most capable of English actors, Mr. John Townsend, who is now living in retirement in the Dominion.

"I cannot refrain from expressing my great admiration of Miss Mather's Juliet. During the last fifty years, I have seen nearly all the Juliets of note, including Miss Helen Faucit (Lady Theodore Martin) Mrs. Charles Keen, Emmeline Montague, Susan Cushman, Helen Blye, Adelaide Neilson, and a host of others. Miss Mather's Juliet, in grace, personal charm, power, refinement, and well-nigh elaborate finish, is worthy of great commendation, and will, to my thinking, bear favorable comparison with any I have seen. It promises, ere long, to outshine them all. Whether in the passionate scenes of love, rage, tenderness or despair, Miss Mather was fully equal to the occasion, and won all hearts by her artistic excellence. Surely a brilliant career is before this talented and accomplished young lady."

BONDS FOR BANKS. There will be considerable earnest support in Congress the present session for a somewhat more radical measure, namely, the issue of a long term bond at a low rate of interest, to be used solely as the basis for a circulation. This has much to recommend it. It would secure the present banking system for the period for which the bond would run, say twenty years, and it cannot be denied that that would be a positive and substantial advantage. Nor would it be difficult to negotiate such bonds in the present condition of the money market, at rates which would be profitable both for the government and the banks.—Milford Journal.

A Reminiscence.

DEAR PATRIOT:—I find the following query among the "Notes and Queries" in last Monday's Transcript. An insertion in your columns may, perhaps, bring a more complete answer than would be otherwise readily obtained. I would suggest that reply be made to PATRIOT office, and published in your paper, as there may be residents of Quincy who would be glad to know the facts about such an item.

Yours, G. T. E.

About fifty years ago I visited Quincy to see the then only railroad in the United States. It was in successful operation, conveying stone from the quarries to the Neponset River. At the terminus of the road, near the quarries was a monument built of granite, about fifty feet high, with a staircase inside leading to the top, and it is my impression it was erected by the town of Quincy. It has not been there for many years. What was it erected to commemorate, and why was it destroyed? H. G.

Michael McCarthy, of Cohasset, for being drunk, and for breaking glass, was found guilty and fined $1 and costs for being drunk, and $5 and costs for malicious mischief.

John McAuliff, of Randolph, for an assault and for being drunk. Found guilty and fined $5 and costs for assault, and $1 and costs for being drunk. He appealed, and was held in $300 for his appearance at the next term of the Superior Court.

And Still They Come.

On Friday evening, Feb. 8th, a large number of the friends of Miss Mary Gerrard surprised her at the residence of Mr. T. Bryant Nightingale, Centre street. This affair was a necktie party and passed off very pleasantly. Having enjoyed themselves with games and dancing, and eating, the guests separated at a late hour. They are still waiting for the NEXT.

THE BOSTON MUSEUM. "Princess Ida" is the title of the new Gilbert and Sullivan opera presented Monday, Feb. 11th, for the first time in this country, at the theatre and by the management which was the first to present said Gilbert and Sullivan in the United States. We have been told, says the Boston Traveller, that Mr. Field witnessed "Pinafore" upon the occasion of its first performance in London, May 25, 1878, and just six months thereafter (Nov. 25) placed it before the patrons of the Boston Museum with a success familiar to all. In London, as well as here, he had been told that it was "too English for this market," "was neither fish, flesh nor fowl," etc., while a well known New York manager, in distress at the time, and having a company that could have produced it in a fortnight, and made for him a fortune, as it turned out, remarked, after witnessing personally its success here, that "it was only a Boston notion." It has always been a Boston notion, however, to admire and support Gilbert and Sullivan, and Mr. Field is certainly deserving of the highest credit for adding to his already heavy expenses, as manager of a dramatic stock theatre, the large outlay required for the production of "Princess Ida,"—designated by Gilbert as a "respectful operatic perversion of Tennyson's 'Princess,'"—the chorus and orchestra being unusually large, the costumes and armors costing some $50,000, and the cast including many recognized favorites. Of success under such circumstances there can be no question, and a long and most brilliant season may be looked forward to. In London, where seats are said to be selling three months in advance, the press have awarded the highest praise to the "Princess Ida."

☞ The Baptist society at Middleboro, which is in want of a pastor, offers a salary of $1500, one hundred dollars for expenses of removal, and an annual vacation of three Sundays.

☞ The Norfolk County Gazette says of the Hyde Park schools: "The no-recess plan is at work in all the schools now. The apparent showing thus far is: There is much less friction in the school discipline; less confusion, and more real work."

Letter from New York City.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13, 1884.

Editors of the Patriot:—

Mud and impenetrable fog, interspersed with rain and one day of partial sunshine, have contributed to the discomfort, danger and disgust of life here for the past ten days. Travel upon the ferries and the "L" roads has been perilous and provokingly slow. To-day is no exception, unless it be for the worse. Objects at a block's distance are undistinguishable. The fog whistles from the river and harbor create a continuous din. One of our oldest residents told your correspondent to-day that he did not recollect such a spell of weather in thirty years.

TRADE.

The gradual improvement of trade continues. It is noticable all along the line of interests dealt in in Wall street. Corn, cotton, iron, coal, oil and mining interests are receiving a new impetus. The recent labor difficulties are slowly adjusting themselves, and the fears that we were going to have a very dull year are giving place to a hopeful feeling which it is very gratifying to observe.

POLITICAL.

The political aspect of things continues about as misty as the weather. Washington sends us an abundance of talk about possible candidates, but as all are probably booms worked upon sectional issues it is very likely that by the time the national conventions meet they will all have been abandoned by the parties as unavailable men.

It is very doubtful if the Tariff be made a leading issue with the Republicans, for it will not work all over. In some localities the Republicans believe in a strong protective policy, in other sections they lean toward free trade, because local business interests seem to be benefitted one way or the other. Hence the prudent politicians will see to it that no righteous Republican falls over the tariff stumbling-block.

The Democrats have raised the war cry: "Turn the rascals out." In the absence of any more definite programme a writer in one of the leading Republican papers has suggested that the Republicans should contend for the keeping in of the present incumbents, men of tried ability and experience. The situation promises to grow quite interesting presently.

BOGUS DIVORCES.

The recent discovery of a bogus "divorce mill," in our city, has let some daylight in upon the "quick and secret" methods of severing the matrimonial bond, which affords some rascals a very profitable business, and cast a blight upon many homes. Not contented with the manufacture of perjured testimony, their usual coin in trade, they have set about forging the Judge's signature to decrees which bear the King's County seal. There is evidently testimony enough to put the scoundrels where they will be sorry for their crime; but what a flutter it will create among those divorced by Judge Clark's decree.

THE QUEEN'S NEW BOOK.

Last evening's papers contained numerous extracts from the Queen's Diary, just given to the English press. Nothing could more completely reveal the good Queen of England's character as a true woman, a fond and loving mother and wife, a devoted widow, a kind mistress and a gracious sovereign than these extracts do; but these pages will be a keen disappointment to the student of contemporaneous history, who hoped that they would throw some light upon the inner side of English political life during her reign. The book appears to be a mere recital of the emotions and impressions of an ordinary good woman, rather than the daily life of the head of one of the most powerful governments of the earth.

AT THE THEATRES.

Mrs. Langtry has won the hearts of the New York public. In the midst of her second engagement here this season, she is the best present attraction, and Niblo's Garden Theatre is nightly packed with an admiring audience. She does not thrill by her acting, but she certainly charms all by her modesty, simplicity and grace of her Lady Ormond in a "Wife's Peril." She is also, despite the efforts of her critics to condemn her, a good actress, and improves on acquaintance, which is more than can be said of some of her jealous sisters in the profession.

Gilbert and Sullivan's opera, "Princess Ida," a recent London success, was produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre Monday evening to an appreciative audience. Owing to the mediocre character of the performers it did not make so great a hit as was anticipated.

The ex-Reverend George Miln appears in Brooklyn this week in the character of Hamlet. His too evident self importance destroys the effect of his impersonation, which may be said to be a very good imitation of Edwin Booth's portrayal of the same part.

The real event of the week is the appearance of Mme. Modjeska, of which we shall have more to say at another time.

PERSONAL.

To-day is the eightieth birthday of the distinguished jurist, David Dudley Field, and it finds him in unimpaired viger of body and mind.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in his eulogistic sermon on the life work of the late Wendell Phillips last Sunday said: "There has never been a day since I was pastor of Plymouth Church when a respectable colored man or women could not come into it." This may signify but little to the present generation, but to those who remember the troublous times to which he referred it means a great deal. Mr. Beecher, in his seventies, is as popular as ever, and the fire and eloquence of his sermons are still characteristic.

F. R. L.

☞ J. P. S. Churchill, Esq., of Milton, has been appointed magistrate by Governor Robinson, to issue warrants in criminal cases, returnable to the East Norfolk District Court and to take bail therefrom.

We are getting along at a pretty good jog in this republic of the toiling millions. At the recent Astor ball in New York, the silver-ware on the refreshment table was worth nearly $200,000.

☞ Rich new styles in furniture can be obtained in Boston of the manufacturer at remarkably low prices. Paine seems to be leading in this; already his immense stock is attracting people from near and far. We know of no other establishment in America that carries so large a stock of nice furniture ready to deliver at once at such remarkably low prices. A visit to his store 48 Canal street, opposite Maine depot will prove to any one what we say to be correct.

For the Patriot.

Washington Letter

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12, 1884.

Though neither branch of Congress has passed or rejected many bills during the week, there has been much discussion of important measures in both Houses, and various new bills and resolutions have been presented for consideration.

Among bills passed by the Senate was one for the eradication of contagious diseases among domestic animals by the establishment of a bureau of animal industry; one relating to Mexican land grant titles; and a bill for an appropriation to complete the approaches to the Capitol terraces and stairways, the amount stipulated to be $777,000. The oft discussed, long proposed Congressional Library building received renewed attention, as did also the question of American ship-building. The House spent a long time in debate on its bill to extirpate pleuro-pneumonia, the longest speech on the subject being made by Mr. Lanham, of Texas, who thought the operations of the measure should be confined to infected localities alone, and should not apply to the great Southwest, which is devoted to stock enterprise and cattle interests, thus disturbing the business of a large territory, where he claimed no disease exists. He spoke of Texas being as large as the combined area of the ten states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Ohio, and said it was "by natural selection, the home and paradise of the common."

Mr. Dorsheimer's international copyright bill, which was favorably reported to the House, promises to reciprocate in kind and degree whatever protection a foreign nation gives to an American writer's works. It is a matter of world wide interest, and the solution of the problem is as keenly desired by the man who reads as by the man who writes. Among new bills presented in the House, was one for the relief of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition, authorizing the President to offer a reward of one hundred thousand dollars to the master, owner and crew of any ship that will during the year 1884, restore to any part of the United States, Lieut. Greely and his party. Another measure provides for the annual appropriation for a national school fund during a period of ten years, the first appropriation to be ten million dollars, and each succeeding one to be reduced one million. A rule of apportionment among the states and territories is made according to population and ages as shown in the last census. A bill was offered to prevent lottery advertisements in the District of Columbia and the territories by the imposition of a fine for every such attempt. Still another bill proposes to amend the Constitution as to the officers and duties of President and Vice President, by the selection of a President and three vice-presidents, each for the same number of years. In case of the removal of one, the office is to be held by the first, second or third vice-president in order.

The house has ordered the printing of ten thousand extra copies of the Morrison tariff bill. The measure is conceded to be a moderate one for the most part, and can scarcely be said to favor any locality or shirk the difficulties that lie in the path of reducing rates. While it hits the iron industries of Pennsylvania, the states of Ohio, Louisiana, Michigan, California, the rice States, and even Kentucky, are struck in their local issues in a manner to arouse antagonism. The two largest reductions are in sugar and woolen fabrics.

Before adopting its new rules, which the House of Representatives discussed for two days, that body resolved itself into a debating society on rules, and each amateur parliamentarian had a chance to ride his pet hobby for a little while, until ex-Speaker Randall, like a legislative Sullivan, knocked each one down in turn. One by one the proposed amendments to the rules fell through, and with them went Mr. Belford's oft repeated suggestion to help unload the plethoric Treasury vaults by granting a clerk to every member of Congress not chairman of a committee. The recently adopted new Senate rules exclude ex-representatives from the floor of the upper House, and by a significant vote the lower House denied the privilege of its floor to ex-Senators, as well as lobbying ex-members. While advocating an amendment to the rules, Mr. Weller managed to aim a blow at the National bankruptcy system, to condemn the action of the Republican party in demonetizing silver, to express his wish for Democratic success at the next election, and to state that Mr. Randall was looked upon throughout the country as a friend to monopolies. The last remark elicited some laughter, in which Mr. Randall joined. ADAMS.

☞ Washington is to have a free public library modelled upon the plan of the town libraries in New England. The 500,000 volumes in the Congressional Library, though open to the public, are practically inaccessible, as the library closes at 4 P. M. and is not open on Sundays.

For the Patriot.

Winter.

The pure white snow is falling fast,
The autumn leaves have felt the blast,
A mantle over earth is cast,
The winter king now reigns.

Ice-bound are all the rippling rills,
Withered the grass o'er fields and hills,
Winter his mission well fulfils,
And closely binds his chains.

The air is full of hail and sleet,
And everybody that we meet
Themselves protect while on the street,
And seek the safest place.

Listen, and hear the merry bells,
How loud and clear the music swells,
Over the hills, of joy it tells,
While steeds speed on apace.

Winter has come, and he will go,
He cannot always stay, we know,
Spring will follow, her wealth bestow,
Bounteous and so free.

Then breezes warm will blow once more,
And blossoms sweet bloom as before,
Wild birds will come when winter's o'er,
Their songs will welcome be.

Farm and Garden.

Have Soils Analyzed.

Some agricultural writers still continue to discuss the importance of having soils analyzed, that the farmer may know what element of plant food is most needed on his field. A reliable chemist acknowledges that the application of a thousand pounds of guano per acre would not affect the soil enough to enable any chemist to distinguish the difference between the soil before it was put on and afterwards. The fertile soil of a field is supposed to be at least six inches in depth, and as there are 43,560 square feet in an acre, there would be 1,089 tons of soil to mix with half a ton of guano. This would be less than a pound in an acre, and as a guano containing ten per cent. of ammonia, and ten per cent. of soluble phosphoric acid, would be called a first-class article, the chemist would have to measure the 217 8-10 part of one per cent. to detect the addition of the guano, yet half a ton per acre of such guano would be a liberal application, and would make all the difference between barrenness and fertility on a light soil. Agricultural chemistry is a useful science, but not quite as exact as some of its professors would like to have the farmers think.—Cultivator.

Impure Seed.

From an exchange we clip the following good and timely advice:

"No farmer can afford to sow damaged or impure seed, and no trustworthy seedsman would desire to sell him inferior goods, yet through simple tests some of the defects in seeds may be detected in season to avoid their use. Thus the germinating powers of wheat, rye, oats and barley may be tested by the simple process of sowing a limited number of seeds in the saucers of flower pots, placing the smaller dishes in which the seed has been planted into larger saucers nearly filled with water, next applying a little moisture to the seed and covering them with a small piece of moist flannel, and finally providing a little artificial heat, such as might be easily obtained by placing the saucers on the kitchen mantel-shelf.

Seeds thus cared for will soon germinate, and the farmer may soon be able to determine about what percentage of any lot of seeds will prove fruitful when put in the ground."

A PRECOCIOUS COW. A. Ellis, Orange, Texas, has a Jersey heifer, only eighteen months old, that gives eight quarts of milk per day, and the strange part of it is, she has never had or been with a calf. The milk, Mr. E. says, is very rich, yielding a pound of butter for each four quarts. We have before heard of such freaks as this, but they are rare.

Anecdotes.

Bridget: "Wot's the most genteel thing for a lady to carry in the street, Nora?"

Cook: "Sure, thin, some prefers a three-volume book, but I prefers a roll of music mesilf, quite careless and aisy like."

"Father, said a bright lad, "I think I'll become a minister when I grow up."

"What puts that notion into your head, my boy?" asked the astonished parent.

"Because, dad, I notice that ma always kills a chicken when the minister eats here."

"Sonny, is your mother at home?" asked the minister, addressing the little boy, who was standing at the door.

"Yes, she's at home," was the reply, "but I guess she doesn't want to see you. I heard her just tell pa that she hated fools, and that she never saw a man yet who wasn't a fool."

She: "I am fond of poetry."

He: "Are you, indeed? So am I. Do you like Burns?"

She: "No, indeed; they are so distressing. But, then, I am not troubled with them much, as ma does all the cooking."

One man was asked by another, with whom he was not on the best of terms, where he had taken up his abode.

"Oh," he replied, "I'm living by the canal. I should be delighted if you would drop in some evening."

Arkansaw Traveller: "Whose grave is this?" said a gentleman, while strolling through a cemetery.

"That," said his companion, "is the grave of Mr. Taggleworth."

"That so? Why, hang it, he owed me ten dollars. I am the most unfortunate man in the world. I needed that money. Hello! Who have we here?"

"Mr. Zulkin, who died the other day."

"Well, that's encouraging. I owed him twenty dollars. Made ten dollars by the two transactions. Arkansaw's a pretty good country after all."

The Use of Cosmetics
is becoming a serious matter to many a woman. The constant use of them will certainly destroy the skin. Why use these poisons when Pearl's White Glycerine, perfectly harmless, will produce a most beautiful and healthful complexion. If your skin is dry and yellow from the use of poisons, Pearl's White Glycerine will return it to a clear, pure and soft condition: warranted.

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

The Liquor Traffic.

Bishop Ireland, the most prominent advocate of temperance among the Catholic clergymen of this country, in a recent address at Minneapolis, said: "Is the liquor traffic to be allowed to rule as sovereign over our fair country and to deluge it with drunkenness and vice?" This is the question upon which citizens of America ought seriously to ponder. I know well the value of moral suasion; of teaching by individual example and individual exhortation, in our battles with intemperance.

But it becomes plain that citizenship enjoins upon us other duties in the premises. The State must interpose its authority to arrest the evil. The State alone has the power; the enemy is organized, determined; individual efforts are as bubbles thrown against a well fortified citadel. The traffic, conscious of the power of the State, has striven to wrest it to its own ends, and the State must hurry to free itself from its evil-working captor. It is a matter bearing upon its own life; the liquor traffic threatens destruction to our republican institutions, and even now, it has in many places made manhood suffrage a meaningless word. The State cannot now be silent and pause, while this traffic fills its jails and poor-houses, increases tenfold its tax list, robs its subjects of virtue, honor and life.

The saloons will raise the cry of "personal liberty," and "personal rights." The State must not be frightened by vain words, from the clear, imperative path of duty. There is no right, no liberty, for men to prey upon the bodies and souls of their fellow-men, and to level blows at the very pillars of society. The claims of the traffic in the name of personal liberty and of personal rights is the bitterest irony, a deadly insult to true liberty and to the true rights of men. The liberty which the traffic demands is liberty to enslave us, and to dip out to us its beer and whiskey, in exchange for our liberty, our possessions, our manhood, our purity, our eternal hopes.

"Away from us this demon-like liberty."

Fashion Notes.

New York Fashions.

The two thousand roses which sandwiched the Vanderbilt mantelpiece on the night of their grand ball, is evidence that these Queens of the garden are still Queens regnant. For a dinner table they are often now arranged singly and with long stalks, pains being taken, of course, that the one rose shall be very beautiful, but occasionally a succession of handsome tulips finds preference. Against smilax one has nothing except that one is tired of it, and therefore newer favorites arise in the shape of ivy and Japanese fern, which adorn walls and staircases in profusion proportioned to the entertainer's purse. Single roses or tulips lying in lowly succession around a dinner table, give the keynote to a fashionable idea, namely, flatness; and many an elegant piece of silverware has been sent into obscurity because not flat enough.

SPRING MILLINERY.

Colored straws are in capote shape, but larger than winter styles, and flowers are small and bunched. Clover is very fashionable, and therefore not only seen in natural, but unnatural colors, while coming next we observe hawthorn, larkspur, clematis, pinks, violets and heartsease. Poppies will flaunt this summer, and, indeed, when one wants a scarlet flower, I know of nothing more effective than a poppy. But the great novelty in millinery are the embroidered linen, batiste and canvas ribbons with other material to match. Chenille is prominent for the flowers in these new embroideries, while the stems and leaves are done in silk. At times there are mixtures of gilt, and the edge of the ribbon are bordered with the same. Other linen ribbons are covered with gilt or silver figures, and here also is fabric for the bonnet brought out to correspond.

FERUARY NOTES.

Ecru lace with large meshes wrought in silver, gilt or tinsel will be used for spring millinery. Mary Anderson writes: "Nonpareil velveteen: it is indeed beautiful in color and texture," while Sarah Bernhardt says of the same material, "magnificent in tone and tissue." New summer silks show figures of berries, fruits or nuts; sateens that might be taken for silks are covered with chrysanthemums, roses, and other medium flowers, while India silks are beautiful in acorn, nut and holly designs. Coraline corsets are superseding these made with whalebone or other substances which all break or twist, since coraline not only outlasts the corset but is so pliable that grace and easy movements result. The great success of these corsets has brought about imitations in jute, tampico, etc., and therefore to obtain the genuine, ladies should see the name Warner Bros. on the box. French poplins are conspicuous among spring importations.

SOCIETY ITEMS.

Mrs. Langtry, in "A Wife's Peril," dresses in to-day's styles; her auburn hair drawn high in a simple coil, and remaining unaltered through five changes of costume. The first, a dinner dress of pale blue silk combined with brown and finished richly with white lace; elbow sleeves and train. Second, a garden dress of salmon and white silk with salmon parasol. Third, evening toilet of pale blue satin, low neck and short sleeves; crimson velvet applique sprays sewed down on front breadth; trained skirt. Fourth, morning dress of green plush and white taffeta silk and lace. Fifth, white muslin made simply with round waist and short skirt. LUCY CARTER.

Conundrums.

Why is a comet more like a dog than the dog-star?—The comet has a tail and the dog-star hasn't.

What two words will make a company rise at any time?—Dinner's ready.

When may a man call his wife "honey?"—When she has a comb in her head.

Why is a man's pastor truly his brother?—He is his parson (pa's son).

Why are pawnbrokers like sisters of mercy?—They take a great interest in serving the poor.

When is a young man the greatest use at the supper-table?—When he's a spoon.

Household Receipts.

PUDDING SAUCE. A delicious hard sauce for puddings is made by shaving some maple sugar just as thin as possible; and mixing it with butter in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls of sugar to one of butter. Serve with hot puddings by putting a spoonful on the top of the saucerful of pudding.

GINGER CAKE. Dissolve a quarter pound of butter and mix with it over the fire one pound of treacle, pour this over four well beaten eggs, then stir in one pound of flour, quarter pound moist sugar, one ounce of ginger, one teaspoonful of carraway seeds, one teaspoonful of baking powder. Take care that the dry ingredients are well mixed before adding the liquid. Pour the cake into a pudding tin and bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour.

Oil of wintergreen mixed with an equal quantity of olive-oil, when applied externally to inflamed joints affected by acute rheumatism, is maintained to be on high therapeutic authority, a means of instant relief from pain. At any rate, its introduction into the sick chamber is unobjectionable, if only for the agreeable odor it imparts to the atmosphere.

One of the best ways to cure sore throat is as follows: wring a cloth out of salt and cold water, and keeping it quite wet bind tightly about the neck. Cover this with a dry cloth. It is best to use this remedy in the night.

Scratches of all kinds are generally painful. If the wound is made by a pin, a little poultice of bread and milk should be applied for an hour or so, and then salve until it is healed.

Miscellany.

How Colds are Caught.

A person in good health, with fair play, easily resists cold; but when the health flags a little, and liberties are taken with the stomach or the nervous system, a chill is easily taken, and, according to the weak spot of the individual, assumes the form of a cold, or pneumonia, or it may be jaundice. Of all causes of "cold," probably fatigue is one of the most efficient. A jaded man, coming home at night from a long day's work, a growing youth losing two hours' sleep over evening parties two or three times a week, a young lady heavily "doing the season," and young children at this festive season overfed, and with a short allowance of sleep, are common instances of the victims of "cold."

Luxury is favorable to chill taking, very hot rooms, soft chairs and feather beds create a sensitiveness that leads to catarrhs. It is not, after all, the "cold" that is so much to be feared as the antecedent conditions that give the attack a chance of doing harm. Some of the worse colds happen to those who do not leave the house, or even their bed; and those who are most invulnerable are often those who are most exposed to changes of temperature, and who, by good sleep, cold bathing and regular habits preserve the tone of their nervous system and circulation.

Winter Ornaments.

Take a goblet with the foot and stem broken or cut off, so that the bowl will be perfect; take coarse red flannel, stitch it neatly around the wineglass or goblet, so as to cover it completely on the outside; dip it in water, and wet it thoroughly, then roll it in flax seed; the seed will stick in and on the flannel—be sure that the seed is distributed evenly—then stand it on its mouth or large end, in a saucer or small plate: put water in the small plate or saucer, and renew or add to it as it absorbs. Never let the vessel get dry nor suffer it to freeze. The flax will then grow, and will look like a fairy forest springing from a red ground. In winter a pretty ornament may also be made by cutting off the head, or thick end, of a carrot and placing it in a shallow vessel full of water. Delicate shoots will soon appear and gradually unfold themselves till they form a beautiful tuft of green leaves.

The Use and Abuse of Riches.

The worst use that men can make of wealth is to hoard it. Riches that are simply laid up, and that are never used are squandered. Money is like powder; no good until it goes off. A man who has a large amount of property and does not spend it, does not enjoy it. He is nothing but a watchman of his own property. Now, I hold that a man does not spend his money selfishly who makes himself an object of admiration and affection in the community. I hold that a man has a right to spend his money on his own house. But where a man has acquired a house he ought to make it and his grounds beautiful. He ought to make his house beautiful with books and all the embellishments of art. He ought to make it the most beautiful place on earth to him and his wife and children. The rich men of a community should then see to it that that community fares well; that it has libraries, reading rooms, with all the privileges of shade trees, parks, fountains, these are the things that rich men should do.

It should be the business of every young man to deny himself. Self-denial is the royal road to indulgence. No man will prosper who is not willing to live upon the lowest, so that by and by he may live upon the highest.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

AFLOAT.

In robes of richest green
The earth is gaily drest;
I float 'mid the shadows
Upon the broad sea's breast.

A bird's low, tender song
Come's floating o'er the lea,
And to my ear it comes,
Alone upon the sea.

O, tender waves of blue,
Come, tell me something sweet,
Let not your voice be dumb,
Rippling at my feet.

Tell me of coral caves
Below your stormy breast,
And whisper of the brave
Who slumber there at rest.

Tell me of ocean nymphs
That ride your snowy foam,
To guide the mariner
In safety to his home.

Keep hold thy treasures, sea!
Like vanished faces gone,
Your wild waves ripple free,
Then softly murmur on.

MABEL LEE.
Lynn, Mass., Feb. 16.

CORA'S VALENTINE.

"Ah! there you are at last, Cora. I was just going to send your breakfast up to you. Did you have a pleasant time at the party last night?"

Cora drew up a chair, stirred her coffee sleepily, repressed a yawn, and replied slowly:

"It was a perfect crush. I got myself ensconced, and enjoyed myself in a corner. I had no mind to spoil my dress by trying to dance in such a crowd."

Mrs. Blondin, for Cora's sister was married, stared. Cora was usually willing to dance, if she could get standing room, and no more.

"You must have had a most agreeable companion," she observed, sagely. "Who was it?"

"I was talking most of the evening to a friend of Mr. Melton's," she replied, the color growing deeper in her cheeks. "He is visiting here."

"Oh! I wonder if it wasn't Val—" began Mrs. Blondin. "But here is Kitty with the letters," she said, stopping short in her sentence.

"No, ma'am," answered the maid, "the postman hasn't come round yet. It's only a note from Mrs. Melton's which the messenger said I was to be very particular to give into your own hands; and he's waiting for an answer."

While Cora finished her coffee, Mrs. Blondin broke the envelope, read the note, and then, with an evident effort to repress a smile, put it in her pocket, and going to a table near by, dashed off a few lines, and gave it to the maid.

Cora's eyes followed every movement curiously. "My dear sister," she said, coaxingly, "what is it all about? And why this mystery? Let me see it, too;" and she held out her hand.

"It is only a note from Mrs. Melton saying she will call this evening with her husband, and asking permission to bring their friend—Mr. Hartwell," replied Mrs. Blondin.

"Oh! is that all?" pouted Cora, in a tone of pretended disappointment.

"What did you suppose it was?" asked her sister, teasingly. "Not a valentine, eh? Although this is the great day."

Cora made a little face, and ran out of the room; and then her sister laughed heartily, as she drew the note out of her pocket, and read it again. It ran thus:

"DEAR NELLIE: When we were school-girls together, you were always begging me not to scheme and plot; but 'tis my nature to,' and you know I never use my gifts maliciously. I have composed a little snare for your sister, whose interest in our friend Mr. Hartwell, only equals his in her. You remember Valentine, don't you? You know that he is everything that is good and manly; so you need have no scruples in aiding me. All I want of you is silence concerning Mr. Hartwell's first name. Don't breathe it; and leave the rest to me. Shall you be at home this evening? If so, Mr. Melton and I will call, about eight; and I suppose I have your permission to bring our friend.

Ever yours, AUGUSTA MELTON."

The day wore on. Kitty, the maid, got a lace paper missive, with two clasped hands, a Cupid, a church-door, a ring, and a rhyme, which made her heart light for the rest of the day; for who but the milk-man sent it?

As for Cora, the valentines she received were almost legion. No one was so popular. And now to-night she sat at a little round table in the drawing-room with her pile of valentines before her. Never had she looked prettier. She wore a simple black-silk dress, which brought out in exquisite relief her fair rose-bloom complexion. Her golden hair, bound by a narrow fillet of black velvet ribbon across her head, fell in masses down her back. Her blue eyes looked up with a soft far away expression. Her rich, red, half-pouting lips were as tempting as ripe pomegranates.

Her sister was standing by her, taking up one valentine after another, and commenting on them, wondering from whom each came. "I should have thought your new acquaintance of last night would have sent you one," she said. "I wonder if this one, after all, is not from him," she added, as she held up an unusually elegant one.

At this instant the door opened, and the maid announced "Mr. Hartwell," before the speaker could put down the valentine.

As the girl spoke, a tall, handsome gentleman entered. He bowed to Mrs. Blondin, and said, holding out a letter:

"Mrs. Melton was so earnest in her entreaties that I should bring you this note that I hurried off before her, at her own desire; and she begged me to ask you to open and read it at once."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Blondin, "it is for my sister," glancing at the envelope.

"Mrs. Melton is abounding in mysteries to-day," laughed Cora, as she rose, and courtesying to the new-comer took the letter. "She sent a fleet messenger early this morning with some secret communication for my sister. I wonder what is in it. But pray sit down."

He complied. She sank again into her chair and read the note, but having done so, she looked perplexed. She turned the papers over, shook them, peeped into the envelope, saying:

"Why, how strange! Is this all, Mr. Hartwell? Didn't she give you another letter for me?"

"That was all, Miss Cora; and although she did not acquaint me with the contents, she seemed to attach considerable importance to my personally giving it to you."

"Well, I don't suppose there is any reason why you shouldn't know the contents. Mrs. Melton only says she sends me a valentine which she hopes I will accept," said Cora.

Mr. Hartwell uttered an inarticulate exclamation; started for the door; came back; and muttering a vague apology, stood gazing at the fair speaker. "Has he lost his senses?" thought Mrs. Blondin. As for Cora she looked at him in undisguised wonder.

"I believe in my heart you have lost it, Mr. Hartwell," she said at last, with a gay laugh. "You have lost my valentine and you are afraid to confess. Isn't it so? Really, you act like one with something on his conscience. Well, I'm sorry to lose it, but never mind."

"One moment, I beg," he cried. "Let me explain, for Mrs. Melton will tell you if I do not. My christian name is Valentine, and she—you know she is full of fun—she must have meant that when she sent the note by me. She sent you a Valentine."

"Oh!" said Cora, stiffly; was that it? Yes, she certainly is full of fun, but I must say I think her joke has been carried a little too far this time." Her voice was quite indignant.

"Miss Grayson, I beg you to believe me. I did not know any more about it than you. I am truly distressed," said the visitor.

"Pray don't apologize. I believe you. Let us drop it." Softening a little in her tone.

But Mr. Hartwell did not wish to drop it.

"Miss Cora, there is something else. Mrs. Melton sent you a valentine which she hoped you would accept. We have met but twice, it is true; and I should never have presumed, on my own part, to offer myself on such a short acquaintance. But it has been done for me; and,—pardon me—I do not regret it. There is such a thing as love at first sight; and I love you devotedly."

He tried to take her hand, forgetful of her sister's presence—who, however, had retired discreetly into the background. But Cora drew back shyly. Neither of them heard the door-bell ring, nor saw a laughing group gathered at the door of the room. Both started violently, when Mrs. Melton's merry voice rang out:

"Upon my word, things seem to be progressing nicely. The good fates always preside over my little plots. So my Valentine pleases you?"

As she spoke, she patted the young girl's flushed cheek.

"Not at all!" began Cora, indignantly. Then she stammered: "At least—I mean—" and suddenly stopped.

"It was really very amusing of you, Mrs. Melton," said Mr. Hartwell, coming to the rescue. "Not at all a bad joke."

"Then she accepted you, Valentine?" queried the saucy little lady.

"She did not refuse me flatly," he replied. "As to accepting, in time I hope she may."

And in time she did. Yes, she married her VALENTINE.—Peterson's Magazine.

Thaddeus Stevens.

It is related of Thaddeus Stevens that shortly after his removal to Lancaster he heard of an old friend in York, a lawyer, who, pressed hard by necessity, had diverted to his own use, $300 due to a widow client, hoping soon to repay her. But unmerciful disaster followed fast and faster,' until the poor fellow's mental distress was actually killing him.

Mr. Stevens hunted up the client, paid her from his own pocket the $300, obtained her receipt, and went to see his friend. "Hellow' old fellow," he exclaimed on entering his office, "you must wake up. Don't be so downhearted. Say, don't you suppose you've really gone and paid that woman and then forgotten it?"

A desparing shake of the bowed head was the only reply.

"Well, I believe you did, and I'am going to look through your papers and see if I can't find the receipt." Then he pretended to ransack some pigeonholes, and a moment later he exclaimed, "Well, if you're not the biggest fool I ever heard of! Look here, old man! What's this?"

So saying, he showed the receipt to his astonished friend, who thereupon recovered his spirits, and happily, his fortunes also. Afterwards he repaid Mr. Stevens, and the latter was never able to find out how his generosity had been detected.

☞ A correspondent writing from Hot Springs, Ark., says that the springs are run by the devil and that he heals his own, so that those who come and receive no benefit can feel assured of their future welfare.

Dressing and Undressing the Sick.

Here are a few hints from the hospital nurse which may be useful in homes: Never begin to change the clothes of the sick until you have all you are likely to require ready. The body linen of bed-ng patients should be changed at least twice a week, and in many cases oftener. Always be careful that there is no draught upon the patient. Let the fresh linen be properly aired and warmed beforehand. Do not move or uncover the patient more than is absolutely necessary.

Begin by removing all sleeves from one arm, then, without moving the patient, put on all that is going on this arm; then raise the head and shoulders removing the soiled and adjusting the clean linen well down under the shoulders; the patient may then lie down, and the other arm be stripped and dressed. After this the hips can be slightly raised, the soiled clothing removed, and the clean garments arranged. Do not let patients help too much; and on the other hand see that they do such things as they can and ought to do for themselves. In giving to anyone sick a drink of water when the draught should be limited, hand him a small glass full. This will satisfy his thirst, be it even so little. It is a mistake to offer a goblet of water in such a case, and direct how many swallows must be taken. The patient will not be satisfied nor his thirst quenched. If you make a poultice in the kitchen, before you begin place a plate in the oven to heat. After the plaster or poultice is made, put it on the heated plate, and it will retain its heat until it is applied.

A Story with a Moral.

Twenty years ago there was an old farmer living about one hundred miles from New York, who took forty pounds of dried apples to the village merchant, and was told that the price was four cents per pound.

"I'll be darned if I submit to this extortion any longer!" he exclaimed. "Why, they are quoted in Horace Greeley's paper at seven cents."

"Hadn't you better take 'em to New York?"

"I'll be kicked if I don't!"

And he did. When he came home and figured up, he said to his wife:

"Well, Hannah, it cost me eight dollars to come and go, two dollars tavern bill, and maybe a little extra for tobacco."

"Then you lost by the trip?"

"Yas, kinder lost one way, but not in another. I got my tea for four cents a pound less than Jackson sells it, and I tell you four cents don't grow on every thistle!"—Wall Street News.

Scandal.

The story is told of a woman who freely used her tongue to the scandal of others, and confessed to the priest of what she had done. He gave her a ripe thistle-top, and told her to go out into the various directions and scatter the seeds one by one. Wondering at the penance, she obeyed, and than returned and told her confessor. To her amazement, he bade her go back and pick up the seeds she had scattered. She objected, saying that it would be impossible. He replied that it would be still more difficult for her to gather up and destroy all the evil reports which she had circulated about others. Any thoughtless, careless child can scatter a handful of thistle-seeds before the wind in a moment, but the strongest and wisest man cannot gather them again; and so slanderous words are scattered to the winds, never to be recalled, the bitter fruit of which oftentimes destroys the happiness and embitters the lives of the innocent.

Couldn't Play on It.

An old man from the undisturbed quiet of rural hill-tops, and his daughter, who was no doubt the belle of the neighborhood, came to the city the other day to do a season's shopping for themselves and any of their neighbors that "sent along." While they were in the store the girl said:

"Pap, I want you to buy me an album."

The old fellow gave her a sarcastic look, and replied:

"What the deuce do you want with an album? You couldn't play on it ef I wuster get it for you."

When the salesman explained, the old fellow added:

"Oh, I didn't understand. I thought it was one of these here things that you take in both hands and shove up together and stretch out. To put pictures in, eh? Wall, she ain't got but three pictures, and they're made on tin. Reckin she can keep 'em in a box a while longer."

The Size He Wore.

Early Wednesday morning a bare-headed, demoralized looking man slipped into a hat store on Main street.

"I want a hat," he muttered to the clerk.

"What size, sir?"

"Le me think a minute," and he put his hand up to his head. "I had on a seven and a quarter last night when I started out with the boys, but my head don't feel like that size would fit now. S'pose you give me a big sixty-six and two-thirds. I guess I can get into that size. Oh, Lord, how bad I feel!"

The last seen of him he had a table-cloth wound around his skull.

☞ It was a colored preacher who said to his flock: "We has a collection to make dis mo'ning, and fo'de sake of yo' reputation, which-ever of you stole Mr. Jones' turkeys, don't put anyfing on de plate." One who was there says, "Every blessed niggah in de church came down wid de rocks."

How to Save the Boys.

When a boy who has a pleasant home, with everything about him that elevates, with indulgent parents, begins to feel uneasy, restless, and out of his element; when he feels that he had rather be in the society of the low and depraved, listening to unclean talk, than at home; then it is that an extra effort must be made, or the future of that boy is ruined. Then it is, too, that the parents awake to a knowledge of the fact that a desperate struggle has got to be made to reclaim the boy. There are hundreds of mothers who realize this, and who have sons that have grown, by their indulgence, beyond their control, and they feel that it is all but an impossible task to undertake to check them in their downward course. Yet those mothers are ready to do what they can. But how often they fail in their intentions, simply because they went at it wrong. They began a course of lectures instead of making home, especially the boy's room, more attractive, providing interesting reading and other diversions, to interest the boy's mind. Invite good and pleasant company to your house, mothers. Let the mothers of a neighborhood club together and devise a series of entertainments and amusements that will so occupy their boys' attention that they will not find time to loaf on the corners or sit around barrooms, listening to vulgar talk of the depraved. The Winter months are more destructive to the morals of the young men who seek for amusement away from their homes than any other time of the year, as they are forced by the weather to seek out warm and comfortable places where lively company is to be found. Where else, than the saloon, is such a place to be found away from home? Fathers and mothers have it in their power to counteract the evil influences that beset youth, if they will but devise ways and means suited to the tastes of the youth, and not forget that they were once young and did not enjoy a continual lecture on morals any more than their own children do to-day. —Peck's Sun.

Be Somebody.

Robert J. Burdette, the facetious editor of the Burlington Hawkeye, has been lecturing to large audiences in different parts of the country, and in his amusing style he imparts to the rising generation some wholesome advice. The following is from one of his lectures:

"Be somebody on your own account, my son, and don't try to get along on the reputation of your ancestors. Nobody knows, and nobody cares who Adam's grandfather was, and there is not a man living who can tell the name of Brigham Young's mother-in-law." The lecturer urged upon his hearers the necessity of keeping up with the every day procession, and not pulling back in the harness. Hard work never was known to kill men; it was the fun that men had in the intervals that killed them. The fact was, most people had yet to learn what fun really was. A man might go to Europe and spend a million dollars, and then recall the fact that he had a great deal more fun at a picnic twenty years ago that cost him just 65 cents. The theory that the world owed every man a living was false. The world owed a man nothing. There was a living in the world for every man, however, provided the man was willing to work for it. If he did not work for it, somebody else would earn it, and the lazy man would "get left." There were greater opportunities for workers out West than in the Eastern cities, but men who went out West to grow up with the country must do their own growing. There is no browsing allowed in the vigorous West. An energetic man might go out into the far West, and in two or three years possess himself of a bigger house, a bigger yard, a bigger barn, and a bigger mortgage than he could obtain by ten years' work in the East. All young men ought to marry, and no young man should envy old men or rich men. In conclusion, Mr. Burdette said that a man should do well whatever he was given to do, and not despise drudgery.

The Greatest Obelisk.

The Washington monument is the wonder of Washington, and its beauty the admiration of both Americans and foreigners. Already over 350 feet high, it rises from the banks of the Potomac a great, white, marble shaft, piercing the clouds, and backed against the blue of the sky! It is already the grandest obelisk the world has ever seen, and in the sons of the future, should the nations of the day pass away, leaving no more records of their progress than the mighty ones of the Egyptian past, it would surpass the pyramids in the wonder of its construction. It is already higher than the third pyramid, and within a hundred feet of the size of the second. It is taller than St. Peter's cathedral, and when finished it will be the highest structure in the world. To-day the cathedral of Cologne, 512 feet high, is the tallest in the world. Next comes the great pyramid, 480 feet high; then the Strasburg cathedral, 473 feet; then the second pyramid, 453; then St. Peter's, 430; St. Stephen's at Vienna, 443; and St. Paul's at London, 384.—Cleveland Leader.

Dead Ones.

The teacher had grown eloquent in picturing to his little pupils the beauties of heaven, and he finally asked: "What kind of little boys go to heaven?" A lively little four year old boy, with kicking boots, flourished his fist. "Well you may answer," said the teacher. "Dead ones!" shouted the little fellow, at the extent of his lungs.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, FEB. 23, 1884.

March Meeting.

One week from Monday next, the annual March meeting in Quincy will be held. The warrant will be found in our columns to-day. It is, as usual, quite lengthy, and contains forty-four articles. Many of them are very familiar, being similar to others in former years. The first really new article is to see if the town will accept of two drinking fountains, which Henry H. Faxon, Esq., is desirous of presenting to the town: one to be placed near the present town pump, by the Robertson House; the other at Wollaston, near the railroad station.

Articles 14 and 15 are very important. They refer to purchasing land left by the late Ebenezer Woodward, for a park, and the choosing of three park commissioners.

Article 20 is to see if the town will pay back money to the heirs of James Huckins, who have been illegally taxed.

Article 22 is to enlarge the Coddington schoolhouse, which is crowded with scholars.

Article 23, to see if the town will vote to have additional hydrants. The more hydrants there are, the better the protection against fire; fewer feet of hose will be required, and less breaking will be the result.

Probably after choosing the town officers for the year ensuing, which usually takes all day, the meeting will be adjourned for several weeks, before acting upon the remaining articles of the warrant.

No-License Meeting.

The arrangements for meeting to secure a large "no-license" vote are complete, and by this time the programme is in the hands of every voter. It will be seen that considerable effort has been made to make every meeting interesting and instructive, and all voters who wish to understand the merits of the question, should attend one or more of them.

The first meeting will be held in the Town Hall to-morrow (Sunday) evening. Mr. Charles A. Foster will preside, and short addresses will be delivered by Theophilus King, Jr., Rev. Edward Norton, L. W. Anderson, Rev. D. M. Wilson, Edwin Marsh, Rev. R. T. Sawyer, H. M. Federhen, Edward Southworth.

The next meeting will be held at West Quincy on the following Thursday evening. Temperance Hall has been secured, and Mr. Jonas Shackley will preside. The addresses will be by the Rev. Mr. Norton, who is always most acceptable to Quincy audiences, and the Rev. Edwin Thompson, one of the most interesting and convincing of our well-known temperance lecturers.

Then on Friday evening there will be another meeting in the Town Hall. Mr. John H. Dee will preside, and the committee have been fortunate enough to secure the services of the Rev. P. A. McKenna, of Hudson. He is a Roman Catholic priest, who, for his zeal in the temperance cause, and his eloquence, has become quite famous. At a recent convention in Boston he proved one of the most attractive speakers.

And lastly, on Sunday evening, March 2d, the evening preceding the election, there will be a meeting in every district of the town. At the centre, in the Town Hall, Mr. W. B. Rice will preside, and addresses will be given by the Rev. Edwin Thompson and B. B. Johnson, Esq. Mr. Johnson is a most able and interesting speaker. This week he took a prominent part in the convention of the Law and Order League held in Tremont Temple. At Wollaston the meeting will be held in the Baptist Church, the Rev. F. E. Dewhurst will preside, and addresses will be delivered by the Rev. R. T. Sawyer, Charles W. Carter, John O. Hall, and George F. Pinkham. At West Quincy the meeting will be in Temperance Hall, the Rev. F. Furber will preside, and addresses will be delivered by the Rev. J. L. Harris and T. H. Newcomb. At Atlantic the meeting will be held in the hall of the school-house, Mr. W. T. B. Emery will preside, and addresses will be delivered by the Rev. Edward Norton and Theophilus King, Jr. At Quincy Point the meeting will be held in the Congregational Church, John Federhen, 3d, will preside, and addresses will be delivered by the Rev. D. M. Wilson and Chas. A. Foster.

OBITUARY. Mr. John A. Wood, whom we announced as being seriously sick, in our last issue, died on Friday night last, of pneumonia. One of the old residents of Quincy, his sudden death was a shock to a large circle of relatives and friends. He has been known among them as a man of excellent habits, of integrity, and as quietly performing the work which fell to him to do. He was greatly endeared to his family, which feels heavily the loss of the loving husband and father. The funeral services took place at the home on Monday afternoon. They were conducted by his pastor, Rev. D. M. Wilson, who took occasion to speak of the high qualities of the deceased. All the children were present, with the exception of Mrs. Sadie A. Robertson, now of Oregon, who was unable to come East. Her unavoidable absence was noted on this sad occasion and lamented.

MOUNT WOLLASTON LODGE. The charter members were to hold a meeting last evening, when the date of the institution of the lodge was to be decided upon, but we did not obtain the result before going to press.

The new hall is improving in appearance greatly, under the skilful hands of the frescoers.

Seven of the charter members visited Commonwealth Lodge, No. 2, of Boston, on Friday evening of last week, and saw that Lodge initiate three candidates. The work was splendidly performed, and the new outfit much admired by everybody present.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY. Friday was duly observed in memory of the Father of our Country. The bells were rung and cannons fired; the national flag was flung to the breeze from many a staff; the schools and banks were closed, and at noon most of the stores. In the evening the Granite Engine Company gave a grand ball at the Town Hall, under the guidance of its foreman, Capt. John G. Woddick.

☞ The Republican caucus will be held at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening next. A call will be found in our columns to-day. The Democrats hold their caucus on Thursday evening.

☞ Mr. T. C. Horn has for sale some valuable eggs for setting, from Leghorn, Brahmas, and Plymouth Rock fowl.

☞ The concert Wednesday evening by the Boston School of Oratory was excellent although there were very few present.

☞ Next Wednesday is Ash Wednesday, the commencement of Lent. Services will be held in Christ Church during the season of Lent.

☞ Mr. George Barker's wife and one of his children are very seriously sick. Mrs. Barker is down with the diphtheria, and the child has the scarlet fever.

☞ Mr. Stedman Williams has been very seriously sick at his residence, on Elm street. We are pleased to learn that he is more comfortable at the present writing.

☞ Mrs. Joseph Whicher left home on Thursday for a visit to Washington, where she will spend a few weeks with relatives. A pleasant journey and much enjoyment is the wish of her numerous friends.

☞ A long address to voters, with three to four hundred names annexed, will be found in our columns to-day. There are many more names expected which if received will be published in our next issue.

☞ The Patriot Office did not realize what a blessing the introduction of water would be. We could not now get along without it. There is enough head on the water to force it into our boiler when we have over forty pounds of steam on.

☞ Mrs. William P. Martin who was taken very seriously sick while visiting friends in Braintree, some weeks ago, has so far recovered as to be brought to her home. We are pleased to learn that the prospects are a speedy recovery.

☞ Archdeacon Kirkby, who has done a great work among the Indians in the Northwest, will preach in Christ Church, Ash Wednesday evening, Feb. 27th, at 7 o'clock, on "Domestic Missions." All interested are invited to attend.

☞ Mr. W. P. Nutting, of West Quincy, left a horse and carriage for a few moments in front of a house at Wollaston, on Wednesday evening, at 10 1-2 o'clock, and on returning found it gone. The horse belonged to Mr. Nutting and the carriage to Mr. John Hall.

☞ The steady growth of the Boston Sunday Globe does not astonish those who read it regularly. All the ladies and young folks are delighted with the Sunday Globe. The circulation is increasing every week in this section. Do you read it?

ROB ROY. As was announced in these columns the drama of Rob Roy was reproduced in the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, under the most auspicious circumstances. The pleasant evening tempted quite a large number to go to witness it, showing that the former performance did not quite extinguish all interest in the play. Everything passed off without a hitch, the various characters were taken up with carefulness and precision, the parts being well sustained, and all received a due share of the encomiums of the audience. After the drama was over the company enjoyed themselves dancing to an early hour on the following morning, and all went home with the conviction that the last sociable of the season was by no means the least in point of interest, or real enjoyment.

GOLDEN CROSS. On Tuesday evening last, Faxon Hall was the scene of as lively and enjoyable a party as ever, in our opinion, graced its floor, it being the event of an annual ball, given by the United Order of the Golden Cross. Quite a large party was in attendance, many visitors coming from Boston and elsewhere. Hanson's orchestra, which furnished the music, kept them well engaged until nearly 12 o'clock, at which time the party repaired to the lower hall, where a sumptuous repast awaited them. After supper, dancing was again resumed, and continued until 2 o'clock.

CONCERT. A temperance concert will be given at the M. E. Church, Wollaston, to-morrow evening, Feb. 24th, by the children and young people. An address will be given by Mr. J. H. Harvey, who has had much experience as a temperance lecturer in the state of Ohio.

Quincy Point Items.

MINSTRELS.

The Quincy Point Minstrel Troupe gave their first grand entertainment on Wednesday evening, in Hall's Opera House. The hall was filled to its utmost, and disappointed crowds were turned away. Although speculators were kept out and every thing was as fair as possible, the price of seats was placed at the exorbitant price of fifteen cents, without reserve. The following programme was carried out with great effect:

Worthy of particular mention were solos by F. Alden, A. L. Mead and Frank Mead. The club swinging by Frank E. Burrell was fine, calling forth hearty applause, and was by far the best number on the programme.

L. Tinkham in his slight-of-hand performance, was truly wonderful. The end man's jokes were of the usual high order, comprising some local hits, and were much appreciated. One conundrum was "Why are the Point girls like boiled potatoes?—Because they are easily mashed." But then the girls deny it, so probably 'tis false.

All in all the entertainment was excellent, and it is hoped that it will soon be repeated amongst us. We understand that by request the troupe will appear in Quincy the coming month.

The Ladies Aid Society held a sociable in the vestry of the Congregational Church on Wednesday evening. It was almost entirely a goose party, and they confessed that it was rather flat; where were the gentlemen? Why, at the minstrels, of course. There are those who would not like to acknowledge it, but it is a fact that a church gathering against a minstrel show is likely to result in great odds in favor of the latter.

The people at the Point are much pleased to notice the efforts being made to secure once more a "no license" vote for our town, and the address to voters is securing hearty indorsement among us.

There will be an old fashioned supper served next Wednesday night in the vestry of the Congregational Church.

Atlantic Items.

Notwithstanding the hard times elsewhere, everything seems to be prosperous here. The Bay State Boot and Shoe Company are doing a heavy manufacturing business, and have decided to stay here five years. Houses are being finished for early occupancy this spring, and cellars dug for more buildings. Messrs. B. R. Redman & P. A. Coombs, seeing a bright prospect for the future here, have opened the store opposite the Atlantic House. They intend to carry a full stock of provisions and groceries. Mr. T. Gurney is still attending to business at the old stand.

Birthday parties seem to be one of the things of interest, especially to those who get their ears pulled. Little Emma Gay Curtin celebrated the fifth anniversary of her birthday on the 5th inst., by receiving twenty of her little friends, accompanied by their mothers. All did justice to the ice cream, cake, fruit, etc., provided by Mrs. C. We can verify the statements of all when they said the cream and cake were good. It being quite stormy, Messrs. Hatch and Sprague acted as hackmen, to whom all were grateful.

Last Friday evening about thirty friends gave Miss Nellie Kendall a surprise birthday party. All carried eatables, and with the coffee furnished by Mrs. K., a fine supper was partaken. The party left in the small hours of night, with faces which bespoke a pleasant time.

Mr. E. M. Pope, for some time in the employ of M. Bray & Co., left home for Paris, where he is to establish a business for the firm.

Mrs. S. B. Travers has gone to New York, where she will spend a short time with friends.

Mr. C. C. Shackford has gone West to sell soles. If the flood continues, he may have an opportunity to save some.

T. Frank Hinkley has just returned from abroad, and is in the place occasionally.

The Rev. Mr. Gordon delivered a very able address at the Schoolhouse, Sunday afternoon. Mr. Gordon is an able speaker, and much liked by all. We expect that Atlantic will soon have a church. HAWKEYE.

☞ Thursday April 3d, has been designated for the annual Fast by Gov. Robinson.

A Rochester couple were hired to be married in the show window of a clothing house in full view of a crowd in the street.

Mrs. Edward H. Slocum, of New Bedford, has sued two saloon-keepers under the civil damage act for $1000 each, for selling liquor to her husband.

There are 80,000 more women than men in Massachusetts.

TO VOTERS.

FELLOW CITIZENS:

Once more, in view of the approaching town election, we urge one another, regardless of party, sect, or nationality, to speak and vote for No license. For two years we have tried the no-license plan, and it has approved itself in the promotion of order and prosperity, manhood and the delights of home, beyond the expectations of the most sanguine.

The law we laid down at the last two elections has been enforced. In the beginning it was objected that the law would be a dead letter, but it has been enforced. The NO of the people has meant something; the action of the town and the conduct of its officers has been a conspicuous example of popular sincerity, which cannot but exalt the general conception of law.

As a consequence of this law and the due enforcement of it, about $125,000, which, it has been estimated, would have passed through the hands of liquor dealers the last year, have been happily diverted into purer channels, bringing life to the home and larger gains to honorable trade.

Temptation having been removed from the path of the workman, he has grown more regular in his habits, and has found himself able to get comforts for wife and children, and to pay honestly as he goes. To this many who know the facts voluntarily testify. As the saloons vanished, order, ambition and prosperity have come to many a household.

It was feared at the beginning of winter, owing to the state of business, that the present season would be a hard one for many workmen, and that much charitable aid would be called for. But no increase of the dependent class has been noticed; rather, in proportion to the population, it has shown a decrease. This, in some measure, is due to the more temperate habits of the people. Of the worst of such cases as are under the care of the charities of the town, it is to be said that they were brought to pauperism by years of intemperance, and such hope of their redemption as is still possible is encouraged mainly by the belief that the temptations of the open saloon will still be with held.

The quietness, temperateness and law-abiding character of the people has been notable. The impression prevails, indeed, that our town has made a decided advance in morals and public spirit. To this not alone has the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors contributed, but also the active responsibility aroused in the majority for the well-being of the community. Like charity, this temperance agitation is "twice blest; it blesseth" the weak by removing temptations; it blesseth the strong in the quickening of their interest in their fellow beings.

The question, then, recurs: Shall we not keep what we have won? It is far easier to hold the field than to fight the fight all over again. The exercise of that eternal vigilance which is the price to be paid for all our most precious privileges,—a little attention and a little time once more given by all,—and for another twelve months we shall be secure in the order and prosperity of the past year. No one can be indifferent to this question. No parent who desires his children should not be led into temptation can be indifferent. No house-holder knowing the danger to life and property from intemperance, can be indifferent. No friend of his kind and country, who sees the portentious problems which are to be solved by a virtuous populace alone, can be indifferent. It is a vital question, affecting all our interests, moral and material. Even persons not prepared to commit themselves to the principles of prohibition in general must see that for us here in Quincy it is highest wisdom to declare again that licenses to sell intoxicating liquors shall not be granted.

Last year Quincy led the towns of the State in the number of "No" votes cast by its citizens. We must do this again. To the selfishness of liquor dealers and the strength of lawless passions shall we not say emphatically NO? With the most sacred interests at stake—self-respecting manhood, the purity of home, the moral tone of the community—shall we not say NO, many thousands times NO? Shall we not join with all who love this ancient town, with all who desire to see its inhabitants prosperous and happy, with all most interested in the well being of their fellowmen, in the utterance of a decisive, not-to-be-questioned NO?

Respectfully,

THEOPHILUS KING, JR., Chairman,
REV. EDWARD NORTON,
REV. D. M. WILSON,
Committee on Address.

Additions next week.

RECEPTION. A very enjoyable affair took place on Thursday evening at the residence of Mr. Francis P Loud, it being a reception given to his eldest son, Mr. William N. Loud, who was on the previous evening married in Waltham, to Miss Abbie J. Wyman of that place. Some sixty of the friends of the family were present and the evening was pleasantly spent. They were the recipients of some very elegant and costly presents. The young couple have our best wishes for their future welfare.

MILITARY BALL. The Braintree Military Company is to hold its annual dance and drill at the Town Hall, Braintree, on Friday evening, March 7th. Quite a number of young men of Quincy are connected with this organization, and this town will probably be well represented. Barges will leave Wilson's store at seven and eight o'clock, for Braintree, on that evening. The ball last year was an enjoyable time, and well attended.

Over 13,000 women have petitioned the Legislature for the right of suffrage.

The costs of law are exemplified in the Cesnola libel suit at New York, estimated to reach $50,000. Better to keep away from the courts.

Wollaston Items.

In pursuance of a call issued to the citizens, they met on Tuesday evening in Wollaston Hall, to discuss the advisability of a lady serving on the School Committee for the ensuing term. The meeting was largely attended, and being graced by the presence of so many ladies, proved that they had the interests of our school deep at heart. E. E. Williamson, Esq., was chosen to preside, and Mrs. H. C. Blossom was chosen secretary. The chair stated in a very able manner the object of the call, expressing the belief that it was the wish of a majority of the citizens that a move should be made in this direction, and invited an informal discussion of the subject. Interesting remarks were made by Dr. W. L. Faxon, Messrs. Quincy, Claflin, Roberts, Taylor, Noa, Mrs. Blossom, Keith and others, and it was evidently the sense of those present that a move should be made at the coming caucus to secure the nomination of at least one lady to serve on the School Board, and the chairman and secretary were empowered to make arrangements for another meeting, to be held on Monday evening next. The name of Mrs. F. A. Claflin was incidentally referred to as one of great strength, and availability, and fully competent to fill the position with a great deal of credit.

At a meeting of the Congregational Society, on Tuesday evening last, it was unanimously voted to concur in the vote of the church, in extending a call to the Rev. B. B. Sherman, to become its settled pastor.

The "Wonderful Wollaston Warblers" will endeavor to drive away the blues, the coming week, by their entertainments on Friday and Saturday evenings.

On Wednesday evening last, Wollaston Hall was well filled with happy couples, attending the calico party, and the hours passed away very rapidly; at least it seemed so, to those who were enjoying the pleasures of the dance. NEWPORT.

District Court, Quincy.

But a few cases have been before the court this week:—

John F. Garvey, of Quincy, for keeping a liquor nuisance; also keeping liquor with intent to sell. The cases were continued until Saturday morning.

Peter Marque, of Quincy, for keeping a liquor nuisance. Found guilty and fined $50 and costs.

Cushing's Express, East Weymouth, for illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors. Continued until next Wednesday.

Among the latest new ideas is a glass bath tub.

America supplies the world with spirits of turpentine.

Some 30,000 children are living on canal boats in England.

Citizens' Meeting.

Pursuant to a call by some of the voters of Quincy, a citizens' meeting was held at Town Hall, on Monday evening, to take such action as should seem best to obtain officers for the proper administration of the affairs of the town. About 350 citizens assembled and the meeting was called to order by Mr. William Burke, and Mr. William T. Pierce was chosen chairman. Mr. Pierce on taking the chair, said that any person having any grievance, there was then an opportunity to lay it before the meeting. A few facts were presented and with greater rapidity explained to be no grievance by Henry H. Faxon and William L. Faxon, the meeting at this stage being practically Republican. After much discussion on various subjects, taxes and the roads mainly, and a light dip at the schools, a motion being made to appoint a committee of fifteen to select candidates to be voted for at the coming town meeting. Prominent on the committee were John Moriarty, Henry H. Faxon, William Burke, Frank J. Bonney, A. Austin, William L. Faxon, James Sullivan, Eugene W. O'Connor and William O'Connor.

A motion made by Dr. Faxon to endorse the present board of Selectmen, for the ability they had shown during the past year, was carried and the meeting dissolved.

PARTY AT ATLANTIC. The young people of Atlantic, gave Miss Nellie Kendall, who resides on Atlantic street, a very pleasant surprise last Friday evening, it being her eighteenth birthday. She was the recipient of many presents; a handsome bouquet of flowers, from Messrs. Hatch & Sprague, was the most noticeable. An excellent supper was prepared by a Boston caterer, to which ample justice was done; after which, music and social games were enjoyed until a late hour. Miss Nellie is one of the recent graduates of the Normal School at Bridgewater.

TOWN DEBTS. The general rule of law in most, if not all the New England states, is that, if a town owes debts which it refuses or neglects to pay, private property may be seized on execution, and sold at public auction, to satisfy judgments against these towns. The theory of this law is that of individual responsibility for town debts; and inasmuch as the responsibility attaches to all the property in the town, and any portion of it may be levied upon and sold for this purpose. This has the effect of making the town keep faith with their creditors. It is a sure and sovereign antidote against repudiation. The system is one of long standing in New England, and has hitherto worked exceedingly well.—Boston Herald.

☞ Mr. Hiram W. Blanchard, one of our excellent correspondents, lectured on Monday evening of last week in the Unitarian Church at Neponset, on "Reminiscences of the Anti-Slavery Days." The Beacon says that Mr. Blanchard spoke extempore, and with great facility, relating many of the stirring events of a generation ago. His reading of Whittier's poem, "A Sabbath Scene," was very spirited. In consideration of the recent death of Wendell Phillips the lecture was very timely, and the large audience seemed to thoroughly enjoy it.

☞ In almost any stationery or grocery store in the country "shelf paper" can be obtained. It has scalloped edges and is perforated in prettily arranged designs, making a lace like appearance. It has grown from a small beginning ten years ago, to a large and important industry, requiring expensive machinery and tools to make it. It is estimated that over $250,000 worth was made and used last year. The paper is run through a press which prints the design then dies are used to cut the same. The dies are costly.

☞ The Chicago Relief and Aid Society directly after the great fire, October, 1871, extended relief to over 100,000 at one time. Nearly one million dollars was expended, under the direction of the Shelter Committee, in building and furnishing over 9,000 houses; $250,000 for sewing-machines and tools for mechanics and laborers; $300,000 for fuel for families. From October, 1871, to May, 1874, it received $4,996,782. Its total disbursements have been over $5,000,000.

FURNITURE. There is now in Boston one of the most extensive manufacturing establishments in America. The entrance to Paine's furniture warerooms is at 48 Canal street, opposite Maine depot. They not only manufacture, but also import from Italy curious carved pieces of the time of the Doges of Venice; from Switzerland fine lace curtains; from France, inlaid woods, tapestries, and rich silks for upholstering; from England, red, amber, blue and black hair-cloth, in richly brocaded patterns, besides a large variety of lace curtains. These, together with their own numerous manufactures, will well repay one to travel miles to visit. Illustrated lists of these sent upon application.

BUST. The parian bust of Wendell Phillips was modelled after the life size by Martin Millmore, and was sent to Staffordshire by Jones, McDuffe & Stratton, and there reduced to small mantel size. When one of the parians was sent to Mr. Phillips, he replied, saying, "The bust reminds me of a face I have shaved for many years."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

A Pleasant Surprise.

On Tuesday evening last the children and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick McDonnell gathered at their residence, on Main Street, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of their marriage. On the arrival of the party, pleasant and joyous greetings were exchanged, after which all were summoned to the dining-room, where a bountiful repast was spread, to which all did ample justice.

After supper a surprise was given Mr. and Mrs. McDonnell. The Rev. M. F. McDonnell, of Woburn, son of the worthy couple, in a short and appropriate speech, in behalf of all present, presented amongst other good things, a purse of money and an elegant easy chair, two very useful articles for an aged couple.

The remainder of the evening was spent in a very agreeable and pleasant manner. Among those present were seven grand-children, who created no little amusement by their childish prattle and joyous frolics.

Soon after twelve o'clock the arrival of the barge was announced, and the good-byes were spoken, when the party started home, with many hopes that all might again meet to celebrate the golden wedding of the worthy and respected couple.

WOODS HOLL, Mass., Feb. 17, '84.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

Being engaged in saving cargo from the wrecked steamer, City of Columbus, and thinking a short letter would be of interest to the readers of the PATRIOT, I send a few lines to you.

If you were to go with us on board of steam tug Hunter, Capt. Davis would give you a cheery "good morning," for he always has a kindly word for every one. You must be on hand early, for at half-past four the order is given to cast off; and with lighter in tow we proceed down the circuitous channel out of the harbor of Woods Holl, into the Sound; then the course for Gay Head being shaped we run for the light. There is no fear of mistaking it, for it keeps flashing continually, every fourth flash being red, and, as you look, it seems to say, "I do my work well, if the compass does vary slightly when passing Gay Head, and if the course be laid right across Devil's Bridge, no man can be justified in wrecking his ship upon the rocks over which I stand sentinel."

When daylight comes we find ourselves well over towards the wreck. We see the masts of the ill-fated ship rising above the water, and just a little way off, the peak of the vessel's prow protruding. At first this seems to be something by itself, as we cannot see the connection between masts and bow, but when the steam tug swings in line of the wreck, a short distance from it,—for we must not approach too closely, lest the heavy undertow throw our own vessel upon the sunken ship, and we, too, be wrecked,—we peer down into the water and can trace the line of the ship's sides, over which the current runs swiftly; and the swelling waves pitch up over the bow and then recede, moaning and hissing continually. We look up at the masts, the tops of which are broken off; in silence we contemplate the shrouds, where so many sought safety, and where but few found it. We look up and see even now fragments of clothing wedged in between the rigging, which flutter sadly in the wind.

When the tug is in the right position an anchor is let go; a line is run to the wreck, and the lighter is moored over the sunken ship. Now, if you will put on the armor with us, Mr. Duncan and I will introduce you to the regions below. If you are a little timid at first, you will soon forget your fears. Possibly your head will ache some; no matter, you will be repaid for that. A weight is now lowered over the side of the lighter, to which a rope is attached, down which you slide to the sunken ship. You will land astride some portion of the iron deck, which has been twisted out of its original position; or you may go down between some of the wreckage, which you will see piled in all manner of shapes: carriages which cost hundreds of dollars; the shattered remains of pianos, organs, furniture, and hundreds of other articles of merchandise, mixed in inextricable confusion, and held fast by great pieces of iron which once formed the deck of the ship, on which were built the staterooms. To complete the confusion, you will see, wound in and out, over and under, the wire fencing which formed a portion of the vessel's cargo, and which, when subjected to the action of the sea, unwound from its coils.

But, keep courage. You will clamber over all this wreckage to the hatchway, which we have already cleared. You will remember that this is the second deck, the upper one having been broken up by the sea. Now drop the weighted rope by which you made your descent, to the bottom of the ship, or as far as it will go. By this rope swing yourself over the hatchway and slide down to the third deck. You will find more confusion here; but don't get excited. Keep your head cool; and, as far as you go, clear your way. You won't be able to see very clearly; you must feel. Proceed cautiously to clear away all those floating plank and broken boxes. We will go in under the deck until we find the cargo; then place the weighted line near it, and use it for a guide in the darkness. Each of us must be careful not to entangle the other's air hose, or life line.

We place our copper helmets together, and one can hear what the other says. Mr. Duncan wishes us to help him move a crate of crockery a little nearer the hatchway. We will go over on his side of the ship and give him a lift; we shall want him to come over on our side soon and assist us to pry up a case of machinery so we can chain it. By this time you have become tired, so I will conduct you to the hatchway and give the signal for you to be pulled up, while I go back under the deck and break out more cargo.

I will tell you how I make out at another time.

Yours, respectfully,
HIRAM W. PHILLIPS.

Washington Letter

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19, 1884.

Almost every week is marked in Washington by the meeting of some kind of a convention. One of an unusually interesting and important character has just adjourned. It was the department of superintendence of the National Educational Association. A number of distinguished educators were present from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Denver, and various other places. Educational questions were discussed by the delegates, and speeches made in favor of generous congressional aid for public schools.

Hon. J. W. Haworth, superintendent of Indian schools, first addressed the convention in regard to the condition of Indian education, stating that there were now four hundred and seventy-two such schools in operation, and over fifteen thousand pupils. Dr. Bicknell, of Massachusetts, then offered a resolution that a committee be appointed to bring the question of education in Alaska before the proper committee of Congress. Mr. Bingham of the North Carolina Bingham School in his remarks on "National Aid to Public Schools," admitted that illiteracy prevailed among his people, but humorously added he would not allow it to be said by anyone else. Speaking on the same subject, Hon. Mr. Dickinson of Massachusetts expressed the idea that whatever should appear in the citizen or in the nation, must first appear in the schools, and that no education containing the two elements, national and individual development, could be produced except in the schools of the people.

The questions of calisthenics and recesses were lengthily discussed, and at the closing session a paper on "Handwork in Schools" was presented by Prof. Ordway, of Boston, giving an entertaining description of his experience among the technical schools of Europe. Another paper was read on "Public Instruction in Industrial Pursuits," the argument being that, as industrial education was, as yet, of an experimental nature, it should be confined to technical schools. Col. Rogers of New Orleans addressed the association on the educational department of the coming exposition at that city. Dr. Jeffries followed with an interesting paper on "Education of the Normal Color Sense, urging the necessity of optical education as a preventative of color blindness; using charts illustrative of optical delusion. The next paper was on "Reading; how to induce pupils to read the best literature," by the superintendent of the Pittsburgh schools, Mr. Lackey. He attacked the scrap-book reader and its allies, the speller and grammar, and approved of the introduction of entertaining and instructive historical books in place of the present fragmentary reader. He spoke of the absurdity of a ten year old child trying to read properly the masterpieces of Webster, Clay, or Calhoun, or of attempting to enter into the feeling of Demosthenes while addressing the Athenians, and said one difficulty was, that reading was confounded with elocution, and that the pupil who understands what he reads requires no drill on emphasis, inflection, or facial expression. He abused the spellers for not being filled with words of every day use, but with columns and pages of words with similar sound and composed of a certain number of syllables, whose orthography the pupil was required to master, without knowing their meaning. He said he would like to chastise the United States spelling book every morning for the bruises he had sustained a third of a century ago in the old log schoolhouse because of his inability to master its contents. Before adjournment Congressman Willis, of Kentucky assured the convention of his active co-operation as a member of the House committee on Education, adding that some of the members of this committee were badly in need of missionary work, that they were devising means to get rid of the surplus revenues, while the minds of their children were benighted. He thought the questions of taxation, tariff, rivers and harbors were lesser ones than that of education for the masses.

In a body the members of the convention went to the White House and called on the President, to whom they were introduced by the Commissioner of Education, Gen. Eaton, who in a short address, alluded to President Arthur's own experience in teaching during his early life. In responding, the President said his school-teaching days and years were the happiest times of his life. He expressed his appreciation of the importance of the work of educating the young, and gave assurances of his earnest co-operation in the cause of public education. ADAMS.

A DEFICIENCY. A deficiency of $17,618 has been discovered in the accounts of Surveyor General Cram. The money, it appears, has been retained by him through a misunderstanding of the statute. The law provides that all fees of the office in excess of $3200 shall be turned over to the state treasurer. Mr. Cram, who is 83 years old, and has held the office since 1855, supposed that the expenses of the office were to be paid from the excess, leaving him $3200 clear as salary. It appears, however, that a proper construction of the law does not permit of such a conclusion. It is not known what will be done about it, as Mr. Cram is poor and his bonds only call for $2000.

NO CURE. NO PAY! Dr. Lawrence's Cough Balsam, when once used takes the place of all others. See our advertising columns. Nov. 10.—1y

Leap Year Suggestions.

An honest husband you should seek,
Without reproach or fear;
Nor should you stop until you pop
The question of the year.

Don't hesitate, nor speculate
On how, or when, or where,
Or if he be a rover free,
Or modest millionaire.

Be sure you're right, then go ahead,
And with a firm resolve,
Determine to go in and win
A man who will revolve.

Around you with devotion true,
And to your chidings hark,
Whate'er you do, we say to you,
Just make him toe the mark!

—New York Morning Journal.

Farm and Garden.

Experiments with Potatoes.

Mr. Lysander S. Richards, who is a native of Quincy, and who is well known to many of our readers, writes to the Massachusetts Ploughman about experiments made by him, on his farm at East Marshfield:

"Desirous of knowing whether good potatoes, and a good crop could be raised from planting green ones (potatoes turned green by being exposed, in the hill, to the sun), I tried the experiment the past season. I planted about one-quarter of my potato patch with them, and in brief would say that the experiment was successful. The quality of the crop and the quantity from those green potatoes were equal to any raised in the patch. These green ones were cut the same as the others, two eyes only left on a piece, and planted in alternate rows, having the same amount of manure and fertilizer as the others, the same cultivation and conditions.

"Another experiment I tried by planting small potatoes, and what I mean by small is a potato that will not measure more than one inch in diameter. The seed end of the potato was cut off and planted in alternate rows through a potato field, the other rows being planted with pieces containing two eyes, from very large specimen potatoes, the conditions being the same for both throughout. During the growth the vines of one row presented as much vigor and luxuriance as the other; no difference could be detected between them, and when the potatoes were dug there was no difference in the yield. The field was well manured and a good crop secured.

"The answer from many farmers to this, I am aware, will be that this result is very likely to happen the first year, but if the crop from small potatoes is planted year after year, the potatoes will run smaller each year, and will finally run out; but this is not the experience of Mr. Edmund Hersey, of Hingham. The second year he selected the very small ones from the crop raised from small the first year, and the potatoes were as large, and I think larger, than from the large potatoes planted; also fewer small ones and the crop as great. The third year the same result followed by planting the smallest potatoes from the small potato seed of the first and second year, except that the potatoes were larger than from the large potatoes.

Good Cows. D. Lothrop, North Wayne, Maine, writes to the Lewiston Journal that he has three cows and a two-year-old heifer—high grade Jerseys—that made, in the year from 22d January, 1883, to 22d January, 1884, 1762 1-2 pounds of butter, of which 1627 1-2 pounds sold for $456.49. All the cows have had calves in the time, and all are with calf, two of them to come in within four weeks. This is an average of 448 pounds of butter to each cow, or a return in cash of $114 each for the butter sold. Adding the value of the 165 pounds not reckoned in the sales, and the average receipts from each cow exceed $120. Mr. Lothrop tried the milk of one cow for one day in the months of January, February and March of 1883. In January she made 2 lbs., 9 ozs.; in February, 2 lbs., 10 ozs.; in March, 2 lbs., 7 ozs.; and on the 18th of October, from one day's milk, was made 1 lb., 12 ozs. of butter. Such dairying pays.

☞ The most expensive land ever sold in this country was the 12x29 feet lot corner of Broad street and Exchange place, New York City, which lately brought at the rate of $15,456,000 per acre, which was high, considering that it was unfenced, and without crop.

Anecdotes.

German Professor: "What, a couple of bounie little children, dear Baroness! Twins, I suppose?"

Baroness: "You have guessed rightly."

Professor: "Are they both yours?"

Grandma (reprovingly): "What, reaching way across the cake-basket, Johnny! I was always taught to take the piece nearest me."

Johnny Wisehead: "But this piece would have been nearest me, grandma, if the cake-basket had been turned the other way."

"No, I don't go with the girl now," said a youth, in answer to a friend's inquiry.

"What's the matter? Did your suit meet with reverses?"

"Reverses! Gosh, I guess it did! Her old man stood me on my head twice."

"Did you give Johnnie the medicine, Mrs. Brown?" asked the doctor.

"Oh, yes, doctor," replied the loving mother. And then she added, innocently, "and it don't seeem to have done him the least harm.

"Don't like the bed?" said the hotel clerk, astonished at the presumption of the complaining guests; "why, some of the best people, some of the high-tonedest folks in the United States, have slept in it."

"Yes, that's just the trouble," responded the guest. "I found last night that there were altogether too many big bugs in it for the comfort of common people like me."

A boosier at dinner on a Mississippi palatial steamer was about to reach out for something before him, but the waiter checking him, explained:

"That, sir, is a dessert."

"Oh," said the boosier, "I don't care if it's a wilderness. I'm going to eat it all the same."

Temperance.

Testimony of James C. Blaine.

"The people of Maine are industrious and provident, and wise laws have aided them. They are sober, earnest and thrifty. Intemperance has steadily decreased in the state since the first enactment of the prohibitory law, until now it can be said with truth that there is no equal number of people in the Anglo-Saxon world among whom so small amount of intoxicating liquor is consumed as among the six hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants of Maine."

Household Receipts.

MUTTON BROTH. Put about three pounds of a neck of mutton into a stewpan or pot with one or two onions cut up and three quarts of cold water; boil gently for two hours, then strain and return the soup to the pot or stewpan, and add a little barley, two or three potatoes and the same of turnips cut into small pieces; simmer for half an hour, skim and serve up with minced parsley sprinkled over it.

One way to prepare onion flavoring for a vegetable soup is to take a large onion, remove the outer skin, then stick cloves into the onion and bake it until it is nicely browned. The peculiar flavor thus gained is relished by the epicure.

One of the wisest precautions to take when you are baking is to have the oven perfectly clean, and yet its one that is often neglected, and many an otherwise faultless dish has been spoiled by the sifting of ashes from the upper grate into the oven.

FRIED EGGS. Fry ham in slices and remove from the pan; break eggs in the gravy and cook till done. Serve an egg on each slice of ham.

FRIED BREAD WITH EGGS. Slice brown bread, dip in hot water, and fry in ham drippings. Serve with a fried egg on each slice.

FRUIT STAINS. The fumes of a sulphur match held under the fingers after picking or hulling strawberries will instantly remove the stain.

Peach sauce, which is excellent for puddings can be made from the extra juice in a can of fruit. Add a little sugar and water, and a few drops of almond extract to it. Let it come to a boil and serve hot.

Sugar cookies without eggs are made of two cups of sugar, one of butter, and one of milk, half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda, half a teaspoonful of cinnamon or of nutmeg, with flour enough to roll.

One pint of sweet milk and a handful of pokeberry root is said to be a sure cure for erysipelas.—Hearth and Home.

Fashion Notes.

A pretty and easy way of remodelling a worn basque is to lay a strip of velvet from the centre seam of the back straight over the shoulder to a point about five inches below the shoulder seam, finishing the end with a bit of chenille fringe or a row of beads. Folds of the material, starting from beneath the velvet, are shirred together about three inches above the belt and conceal the worn parts perfectly.

The pattern muslins are embroidered in all the colors of the rainbow this year, and imitate the "tapestry" woolens as much as possible.

Summer shirtings are adorned with the most grotesque figures. A monkey with a violin, Kate Greenaway girls and Japanese designs are the mildest.

Nun's veiling bids fair to be almost superceded this Summer by India silk, which is prettier and cooler, and with a little dark velvet makes a charming suit.

Colored wraps of velvet brocaded grenadine are promised for the Summer, and very astounding things they will probably be. The reign of color is doubtless a good thing for the artist who finds suggestions everywhere, but it is a reign of terror to the man who is not looking for suggestions and is sensitive to discords.

Cuffs are again worn with all street dresses.

Collars still fit closely and fasten with a stud.

This and That.

☞ "Yes," remarked Fitznoodle, "I used to take my dog out when I started on a promenade; but I don't do it now. It wasn't pleasant, you know, to have people inquire which was Fitznoodle and which was the dog."

☞ An old gentleman who got tripped up while trying to cross the ball room remarked, as he slowly crawled to a perpendicular, that it was always pleasant to be thrown in the company of young people.

☞ Jones asked his wife, "Why is a husband like dough?" He expected she would give it up, and he was going to tell her it was because a woman needs him; but she said it was because he was hard to get off her hands.

☞ An exchange says that it makes a woman sick to keep a secret. That's why women always feel better after tending a sewing society.

☞ Modern song of the Shirt: "Rip, rip, rip, band and gusset and seam. Rip, rip, rip; confound the sewing machine."

Conundrums.

How can it be proved that a horse has six legs? He has fore legs in front and two behind.

Which of your parents is your nearest relative? Your mother of course. Is not the other father? (farther.)

At what point does the British army enter hostile cities? At the point of the bayonet.

Proverbs for Leap Year.

Love makes labor light.

Love knows hidden paths.

Love teaches asses to dance.

Love me little, love me long.

Love your friend with his faults.

Lovers think others have no eyes.

Love, thieves and fear make ghosts.

Lovers' quarrels are love redoubled.

Lovers' purses are tied with cobwebs.

Love rules his kingdom without a sword.

Love subdues everything except the felon's heart.

Love your neighbor, but don't pull down his fence.

Love, knavery and necessity make men good orators.

Love makes time pass away, and time makes love pass away.

Ami moi un peu mois continue. Love me a little, but keep it up.

Love others well, but love thyself the most; love good for good, but not to thine own cost.

Love one who does not love you, answer one who does not call you, and you will run a fruitless race.

Identify Yourself.

A raw-boned Irish woman entered one of the national banks in Providence, the other day, and presented a check at the cashier's desk. The cashier looked at her and said politely, "Madam, you must get identified." "Faite, an' what's that?" "Why, you see, you are a stranger to me. I don't know you." "Will, I'm not too proud to introjuce meself too yez. My name's Sary MacFlinn, an' I'm not ashamed of it!" "Well, but you see I cannot tell whether you are the person whose name is on the check," said the cashier, too polite to tell her that perhaps she was lying about it. "An' what did ye say I must do?" "Identify yourself. Bring some one here that knows you." "Indade! And who knows me better than I know meself?" The cashier paid the check without another word.

Insane Wit.

The following dialogue is reported as having taken place between a gamekeeper and a patient looking from the iron gate of a French lunatic asylum:

Patient—"That's a fine horse; what is it worth!"

Keeper—"Five hundred dollars."

Patient—"And what did that gun cost?"

Keeper—"One hundred dollars."

Patient—"And those dogs?"

Keeper—"Eighty dollars, I believe."

Patient—"What have you in that game-bag?"

Keeper—"A woodcock."

Patient—"Well, now, you had better hurry on, for if our Governor catches a man who has spent six hundred and eighty dollars to get a woodcock worth thirty cents, he'll have him under lock and key in less than no time, I tell you?"

"Floating" Oysters.

This is a term known among oyster packers as describing a way of making these bivalves look large and fat, although a close inspection will show that oysters so treated lack solidity and firmness, and are rather fluffy and bloated. The oysters are transferred from their native beds to tanks with different and larger proportion of fresh water, and the operation became known as "floating" because, at first, the oysters were transferred from the vessels bringing them in to floats, which were towed to localities having the desired change of water, and there submerged. Oysters treated in this way are not only likely to lose their delicate flavor, but sometimes acquire a taste that is anything but desirable, which must have been the case in at least one instance in Chicago, where a dealer advertised that he did not sell "kerosene" oysters."—Scientific American.

A clergyman in Durham, England, some short time since, taught an old man to read, and found him an apt pupil. After his lessons were finished he was not able to call for some time, and when he did only found the wife at home.

"How is John?" said he. "How does he get on with his reading?"

"Oh, nicely, sir."

"Ah, I suppose he'll read his Bible very comfortably, now?"

"Bible, sir! Bless you, he was out of the Bible and into the newspapers long ago."

☞ At a school examination a clergyman was descanting on the necessity of growing up loyal and useful citizens. In order to give emphasis to his remarks, he pointed to a large flag hanging on one side of the school room, and said: "Boys, what is that flag for?" An urchin who understood the condition of the room better than the speaker's rhetoric, exclaimed: To hide the dirt, sir!"

☞ The power of love can transport a five-pound box of caramels twenty-five blocks before marriage, but after that it breaks down under as little as a gum-drop.—Merchant Traveler.

☞ You do not deal a death blow to the Darwinian theory by saying: "Man descended from the monkey, but what did the monkey descend from?" The monkey descended from the tree.

A Card from a Lady.

New Haven, Conn.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—I have suffered with the chills and fever and malaria for the past two years, residing during that time at 780 Chapel Street, New Haven. I used quinine in its various forms, and a great deal of it. While I could prevent the chills I could not rid myself of the poison. For some time last summer I was so weak that I could not sit up but a very little; my countenance was swollen, and quinine failed to give me an appetite or to act perceptibly as a tonic. In this condition I began the use of your "Lewis' Red Jacket Bitters." Immediately I felt their effects; in two weeks I was nearly in my usual health. I used two bottles since that time. Whenever I have a recurrence of malarial symptoms, I use a few doses of Red Jacket Bitters, and I certainly consider them a most reliable remedy. They are my medicine.

Yours, respectfully,

MRS. T. F. WARNER.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

WOMAN.

With white hands tightly clasped,
With eyes that fill with tears,
For the inevitable flight of years,
For hopes outweighed by fears,
She knelt to pray.

O God, in mercy hear my prayer!
Bless him for whom my life doth wear
This garb of sadness;
Keep his footsteps where'er they stray,
May every sorrow flee away,
And fill his days with gladness.

O woman heart!
How oft your part [illegible],
To Heaven you send
Prayers without end,
O sorrow! where is thy beauty?

With faith alway,
Her heart will say:
"O God, bless him I love!"
Should her heart break
For his dear sake,
Take courage, Heaven's above!

H. S. C.

Miscellany.

AT UNCLE PAUL'S.

"There," said Juliet Garland, impatiently, "I can't wear these kid gloves again by any possibility. They've been once to the cleaner's, and I've done them myself twice with bread-crumbs!"

She sat in the deep window-seat, her bright hair streaked with morning sunshine, her blue eyes sparkling with vexation, while a pair of very much demoralized kid gloves, of the palest primrose tint, lay in her lap.

And Dora, her younger sister, looked listlessly up from the pile of music she was turning over—another of the bright blonde blossoms of humanity.

"Why don't you get yourself a new pair?" said she. "Oh dear! there isn't a song here that is not a hundred years old. 'Juanita,' 'Her bright smile,' 'Beautiful daises,' and all that sort of thing. Rosie must get something that isn't coeval with the ark. How is a girl to—"

"Why don't I get myself another pair?" sharply cross-questioned Juliet. "Because I haven't any money—that is the reason!"

"It's so dreadful to be poor!" sighed plump, pretty Dora, contemplating her pink finger-tips; and at the same moment Mrs. Templeton, the married blonde of the family, came in with a worn look upon her face.

"More bills," said she. "Oh, girls, what will Frank say? Stefani has actually had the hardihood to charge seventy-five dollars for that little lunch we gave to Mrs. Atwood and her son. And Madame Cherimont's account is eighty-nine, and I'm positively afraid to open the florist's bill."

"Then it's no use asking for more kid gloves at present," said Juliet disconsolately.

"Nor music," added Dora, with a shrug of her shoulders.

Mrs. Temple burst into tears.

"I declare," said she, "I'm discouraged. And you girls are always teasing for something or other, and Frank is so cross whenever we exceed the regular allowance!"

"Crying will do no good," said Dora, who was evidently the philosopher of the family. "But what is that letter in your lap, Rosie?"

"Oh, that," said Mrs. Templeton, "is from Uncle Paul. I declare, Stefani's bill upset me so that I forgot all about it. He wants one of you girls to come up to the Maine Camp and keep house for him. It's somewhere on the line of the Rangeley Lakes, I believe. Owls and whip-poor-wills thrown in. Come girls, which of you will volunteer?"

Juliet gave a little shriek of dismay. Dora elevated her pink, cushiony hands. But a third sister who had been silently mending the flounces of a pink silk skirt, in an obscure corner, looked up.

"Is Uncle Paul really in earnest?" said she. "Then I'll go."

"Gladys!" cried all three of the others, in different accents of amazement, reproach and incredulity.

Gladys Garland rose up, flung aside the soft billows of pink silk that cumbered her lap, and came out into the light. Of all the sisters, she was perhaps the loveliest and the most determined.

"Why not?" said she. "Do you think I am particularly in love with this sort of life? I declare, there have been times within the last month when I've felt inclined to go for a servant-maid, or look up a situation as factory-hand. Just consider, girls—the dress I wear isn't paid for: the milliner is always sending her girl around with bills. I can't go on this street nor on that, for fear of meeting some one who will ask me for the money that I honestly owe them. Rosie, like a darling that she is, keeps giving parties and lunches, and morning musicales, to try and get us well married. Frank, poor fellow, is working beyond his strength, to give his wife's sisters a fair chance; but it isn't a bit of use. See how we all hang fire. Now I don't know about Julie and Dora, but I, for one, am tired of being put up in the world's window, 'For sale!' Yes, I'll go to Uncle Paul."

"But," gasped Mrs. Templeton, "what will society say?"

"What it pleases," Gladys answered. "Society don't settle my boot bill, nor provide me with pocket money."

"Gladys," said Juliet, remonstratingly, "I think you are crazy!"

"Because I am emancipating myself from slavery? But you know, Julie, I cannot see where all this is to end."

"What will Mr. Mandeville say?" demurely questioned Dora, with a sly, sidelong glance at her sister.

"He will say," Gladys stoutly answered, "that there is one fortune hunter the less in the ranks."

"Gladys, how can you speak so coarsely?" said Juliet, not without indignation.

"Is it coarse?" said Gladys. "It is the simple truth. Mr. Mandeville is very handsome and agreeable, but I don't think he will miss me after the first evening or two. Oh, there are too many Peris in this Paradise! And poor, good, patient Frank, he will have one less to provide for. "Yes, I will go with Uncle Paul."

"You may as well commit suicide at once," said Juliet.

"You'll never marry in that wilderness," said Mrs. Templeton.

this block," said Gladys. "[illegible] them yesterday, Dora and I. Do you suppose there are nineteen old maids on Lake Molechunkamunk?"

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Templeton.

"And besides," added Gladys, the laughter fading from her eyes, "is it really the end and aim of all female humanity to get married? Why shouldn't I be an old maid as well as another? Do you think I shouldn't survive it? Wait and see."

Gladys Garland had definitely made up her mind on the subject. Within three days she had purchased a pair of thick boots, a blue flannel suit, and a poke bonnet of rough straw, trimmed with blue ribbons, and gone out to Lake Molechunkamunk.

Uncle Paul was glad to see her. He didn't live in a wigwam, as she had almost taught herself to believe, but owned a pretty little lodge in this vast wilderness, shaded with forest trees, and embowered with blue-cupped morning-glories.

He was civilized, and did not assassinate English grammer like the champion hunter in the dime novels. And he had provided a pretty little boudoir for her, whose pink mosquito netting set the black flies and gnats at defiance, and an exquisite engraving of the Madonna di San Sisto hung over the broad mantle.

"Oh, I think I shall be quite, quite happy here," said Gladys, as she sat in a little boat where the drooping boughs of the hazel bushes made blots of shadow on the glittering lake, and read while Uncle Paul fished.

"Don't regret any of the New York cavaliers, eh?" said Uncle Paul.

And Gladys stoutly answered:

"No!"

But afterwards she asked herself had she told the whole truth?

"If Darrell Mandeville chooses to marry Miss Dorrance, let him," she thought. I shall never pursue any man. Let other girls do as they think fit."

That very afternoon, however, when she returned from a long ramble in the woods, with her straw hat full of blackberries, she found the little lodge occupied.

"I am sorry to take you thus unceremoniously by storm," said a handsome, middle-aged gentleman, who looked to be what he was, a Wall street broker come out into the wilderness for his summer vacation. "But my friend has fallen over a cliff and broken his leg, and this was the nearest point of shelter within a range of seven miles. Perhaps your husband will excuse us, if—"

"But it isn't my husband," said Gladys, composedly depositing the berries on the table. "It is my uncle Paul. He is fishing, up the lake. But if he were here, he would say, as I do, that you are very welcome. Where is the poor man? I am not much of a surgeon, but—"

She stopped abruptly. There, lying on the little chintz-covered lounge, his pallid face supported by cushions, lay —Mr. Darrell Mandeville.

"Miss Garland!" he exclaimed, I am so glad!"

"Mr. Mandeville," she uttered, in the same breath, "I am so sorry!"

"Because I have drifted here, of all places in the world!" he pleaded.

"Because you are so badly hurt!" faltered Gladys, with tears coming into her eyes.

"I knew you were somewhere in this region," he said. "In fact, Miss Gladys, I was looking for you. But I didn't expect to find you just now, and thus, I thought—"

And then he closed his eyes; a deadly pallor crept across his face.

"I think he has fainted," said the Wall street broker.

And just then Uncle Paul came in—Uncle Paul, who was a born chirurgeon and who understood all the healing secrets of the glen and forest—and Gladys heaved a deep sigh of relief. It would all be right now.

A broken leg is no joke, especially in the back woods, where splints have to be manufactured out of the most incongruous material, and arnica cannot be had short of twelve miles.

Mr. Mandeville made but a slow convalescence, yet he did not appear to regard the detention as unpleasant. The Wall street broker went back to his stocks and bonds.

"I think we could easily get you to Andover," he had said, wistfully, "And a parlor car from there—"

"Oh, hang your parlor cars!" said Mr. Mandeville, impetuously. "I am doing very well where I am now."

"Oh!" said the Wall street broker, a sudden light of comprehension irradiating his dull brain. "Oh, in that case I may as well leave you to your fate! It's the old story of Ulysses and the Sirens over again."

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Templeton came into the room where Dora and Juliet were remodelling their white dresses for a theatre party to the Casino, one September day, with flushed cheeks and shining eyes.

"Girls," she cried, "what do you think? Gladys is engaged."

"To some buffalo hunter," said Dora scornfully.

"No!" said Rosie. "To Mr. Mandeville. He has been up there for a month—at Lake Molechunkamunk."

Juliet dropped her work.

"Impossible!" she cried. "Gladys engaged up in those wildernesses, while Dora and I are left to wither on the stem down here in New York! And to Darrell Mandeville, too—the best match of the season."

"Things do turn out so strangely," said Mrs. Templeton, reflectively.

And Gladys, the predestined old maid of the family, was the first to be married, after all.

"Gladys always was lucky!" said her two sisters.—Saturday Night.

The Action of the Corners on the Temperance Question. Mr. Bascom's Ultimatum.

CONFEDERIT X ROADS,
Which is in the State uv Kentucky,
Feb. 9, 1884.

The Corners is all tore up on the matter uv Temperance. The wimmen are, ez yoosual, the fust coz uv the trubble, ez they are the fust coz uv all trubble. Eve begun the rumpus in the Garden uv Eden, and the sex hez contiyood makin trubble ever sence.

The espeshl trubble now is the insane desire wich Mrs. Bascom hez to show orf her new cloze. Bascom hez money to buy his wife new cloze with and like a fool he duz it, and when Mrs. Bascom gits em she can't resist the delite uv wearing uv em in public. I remonstrated with her, and told her trubble wood ensoo, to wich she ansered:

"Wat is the yoose uv hevin silk dresses ef no one sees em?"

"Yoo mite put em on, Mrs. B.," I remarkt, "in the privacy of your room, and gladden the eyes uv G. W., wich pade for em, with the site thereof."

"Bosh," wuz her reply. "Don't you know that no woman could take any comfort in noo cloze onless she could show em to other wimmen? Can't yoo understand that the cheef delite of hevin good cloze is in makin every other woman wich sees em envious of you? Wear em for G. W., indeed! I coodent fool him."

And so that very afternoon she rigs herself out in a figgered silk dress, with a hat with ostridge feathers in it, and a sealskin sack, and shoes with heels, and red silk stockins, and she paraded the whole length uv the streets thus arrayed, and tho the sidewalk wuz ez dry ez a bone she heid up her skirts so ez to show them red silk stockins. It is unnecessary to say wat effeck it hed onto the other wimmen uv the Corners. Ther wuz sevral dispoots in families wich resulted onpleasantly. Kernal McPelter cum to Bascom's that nite almost bald-headed and Issaker Gavitt hed a face that was severely scratched, and they both swore that suthin had to be done to keep Mrs. Bascom from inflamin the minds uv ther wives with such fixins.

Then these wimmen started a croosade wich Pollock and Joe Bigler jined in, and the result wuz a meetin uv citizens wich embraced half a dozen men and every woman in the Corners, ceptin Mrs. Bascom. Joe Bigler made a inflammatory speech to these wimmin showin that ef ther husbands wood let likker alone they cood hev silk dresses and red silk stockins, ez well ez Mrs. Bascom, that Bascom wuz absorbin all the money of the Corners, and that so long ez he persisted in takin the money uv ther husbands for sod-corn whiskey so long wood they hev to dress in caliker, and go without stockings, anyhow, and they mite consider themselves lucky ef they corralled enuf to get em shoes. And they interdoost resolooshens demanding the prohibishun uv the sale uv likker in the Corners.

We wuz sent for and we thot it advisable to go, tho it hurt my feelins to hev a meetin in the Corners uv wich I wuz not Cheerman.

The resolooshens wuz read, and ez spokesman for the Liberal party I made a few remarks. I sed possibly a reform was needid, but most men wood admit that the trade in likker should be regelatid. But grate bodies move slowly, and it was not wise to attempt too much. To prohibit entirely was too long a step, and wood fale becoz uv the immensity uv the straddle. Wood it not be well to go a little slower and regelate the traffic, wich cood be done, instid of attemptin its destruckshen, wich wuz impossible.

Bascom rose, but I pulled him down. "Let me manage this," I sed, in a whisper, "and thank the good Lord that you hev a man uv sense to turn aside this blow."

"Wat do you perpose?" asked Bigler.

I went on calmly. "I shool not attempt to perhibit, but regelate. Regelashen is possible. Speekin for Bascom, wich represents the likker interest here, I shood be willin to hev an ordnance passed perhibitin the sale uv intoxicatin drinks to drunkards and minors. That is a step in the direckshun you are headin for, and is enuff for a starter."

Then I cooldn't hold Bascom any more. He riz in his wrath, called me a fool, and swore I hed no authority from him to make any sich compremise.

"I am perfeckly willin," sed Bascom, "that you shel pass a ordnance prohibitin the sale of likker to drunkards. You coodent do me any greater favor. Wat good is the Parson here, or Issaker Gavitt, or Deekin Program to me? I have a mortgage on everything they've got, anyhow. Their farms are kivered ez with a blanket, and they can't work to earn any more. I am running em on tick, with no hopes uv pay. They hev outlived ther yoosefulnis to me. Take em! Take em! I have no further yoose for em. But the minors! Ah no! Who is to take the places uv these worn-out vetrans at my bar, ef you prevent me from sellin to them? They kin still work. They kin still earn money for me, and will be able to for years. They hev lands wich I hevn't a mortgage onto, and they have days works into 'em wich, if they will come to me, I am shoor to git.

"I don't want the regler drunkards no more, and I am willin yoo shel make it a penetenshary offence to sell em likker. It wood be a good idee to reform em. Yoo kin keer for em in the poor house till they git strength enuff to go to work [illegible] they woulden't be drunkards any more, they cood cum back to my place with renood strength and [illegible]. Ez they are they are no use to me, you may hev the drunkards and welcome.

"But the boys I insist upon havin a whack at. They hev strength, they hev vigger, and they kin work. I don't perpose to heve them incloodid in any perhibishen movement. Take yer drunkards, but leeve me the boys. When they become drunkards yoo may hev them too, but not now."

Bigeler and Pollock swore they'd pass the resolushen ez originelly presentid, but Bascom wuz inflexible. He turned to me, and Issaker, and the Deekin, and the Kunnel, and remarked quietly, but with a manner that meant biznis:

"Gentlemen, let em pass it, but when it comes to a vote at the polls, it must be defeetid, or not another drink do yoo git on credit at my bar."

"But public opinyun!" I sed, piteously.

"Public opinyun be d—d," was his reply. "Where's yoor public opinyun? A lot uv wommin wich hev no votes, and Joe Bigler, and Pollock, and a passel uv niggers. Ez I sed, I don't keer ef they perhibit sellin to drunkards, but the proposishen ez a null shel go down. I am not crooel. I am willin to carry you awhile longer. It can't be for a great while and I kin stand it."

Bascom sed to us afterward, privately, that he shood see to it that his wife shood not inflame the women of the Corners any more by appeerin in her store cloze, that he hed arranged to send her to Louisville every time she yearned to display her dry goods, and the matter wuz finally settled, so fur ez we were concerned, on that basis.

We shel defeet the proposishen ez a matter uv course, for Bascom hez us. He will give us credit and no one else will. Whether the fanatix will attempt to carry out their skeem remains to be seen.

The Cheerful Face.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the sunlight of a cheerful face. It may be a plain face, but then there is something in it which we cannot feel, we cannot express, and its cheerful smiles send the blood dancing through our veins for very joy. We run towards the sun, and its warm, genial influences refresh and strengthen our fainting spirits. Ah, there is a world of magic in the plain, cheerful face! It charms us with a magic spell of eternity, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.

It may be a very little one that we nestle upon our bosom or sing to sleep in our arms with low, sweet lullaby; but it is such a bright, cheerful face. The scintillations of joyous spirits are flashing from every feature. And what a power it has over the household, binding each heart together in tenderness and love and sympathy. Shadows may darken around us, but somehow this face ever shines between, and the shining is so bright that the shadows cannot remain, and silently they creep away into the dark corners, where the cheerful face is gone.

It may be a wrinkled face, but it is all the dearer for that, and none the less bright. We linger near it, and gaze tenderly upon it, and say: "God bless the happy face!" We must keep it as long as we can, for home will lose much of its brightness when that sweet face is gone. And after it has gone, how the remembrance of it purifies and softens our wayward nature. When care and sorrow would snap our heart-strings asunder, this wrinkled face looks down upon it, and the painful tension grows lighter, the way less heavy.

Shipwrecks.

Shipwreck, in the estimation of most people, is saved from being regarded as a calamity of supreme importance through the supposed fact of the rarity of its occurrence. Disasters like that to the "Huron" and the "City of Columbus" are so few and far between as to make the whole matter of marine mishaps seem exceptional and out of rule; and even the occasionally long lists of fishermen lost are regarded as untoward events recurring only at long intervals. Looking, however, at the aggregate of shipwrecks, even for a single month, the matter assumes a new phase, and the figures carrying the specific information contain a revelation indeed. For instance, during December last (not at all remarkable for either the number or quality of its disasters of the kind), there took place 182 shipwrecks, 161 sailing vessels and 21 of steamers, the vessels lost and reported representing only those of civilized nations. In this aggregate are included 14 vessels reported missing, which usually means the worst form of loss, since neither vessel or company on board are ever likely to be again heard from under such circumstances. It will be seen by this statement that during every day but one of that month a half dozen vessels succumbed to the perils of the ocean; and it is not likely that the record for the year will be less provocative of astonishment than the above.—Old Colony Memorial.

SATURDAY, MAR. 1, 1884.

A RARE BIRD. Harry Slade, son of Mr. James H. Slade, a lad of sixteen, shot on Saturday last, in the Town river, near his residence, a bald eagle, which measured seven feet from tip of wings. He was a noble bird and a true representative of our national emblem. Mr. Slade has sent him to Boston to be mounted.

The eagle got terribly deceived. He was flying over the river in search of fish, which bald eagles are especially fond of, and seeing some ducks in the water went down and grabbed one by the head and started off, but did not proceed but a few feet with his prey before he dropped it. It proved to be a wooden decoy, and was fastened to others by a rope. Harry, who was lying in ambush for ducks, improved the opportunity and shot the prize.

SURPRISE PARTY. The friends and school-mates, to the number of twenty-five or more, met at the residence of Miss Maud Rice, in Atlantic, on the evening of Friday of last week, and gave that young lady a very pleasing and agreeable surprise. A few hours were greatly enjoyed in games and amusements, interspersed with social conversation, and the time passed all too quickly. A summons to the refreshment table was responded to by the happy crowd, and the feast of good things was partaken of with a zest. [illegible] to the cars caused the early departure of the party, and the joyous good night, having spent the few hours very delightfully, and feeling that their surprise had been a perfect success.

PERSONAL. Mrs. Adelaide A. Claflin, who has been nominated by the citizens' caucus, and afterwards by the Republican caucus, for a position on the school board, is the wife of Mr. F. A. Claflin, of Quincy. She is a lady of refinement and culture, a graduate of the Boston Normal School, and was for some years a valued and successful teacher in the Winthrop School of Boston. Mrs. Claflin is the mother of three children, two of whom attend the Coddington school.

MISSIONARY LABORS. On Wednesday evening a small audience was present at Christ Church, to listen to an address by Archdeacon Kirkby, who, for over twenty-seven years of his life labored as a missionary among the Indians of the Northwest territory. His address was very interesting and instructive, and we were sorry that more were not present to listen to it. It is to be hoped that the gentleman will again visit this town, when we are sure that a large audience will greet him.

ASSAULTED. James McClaferty, of Quincy, was assaulted on Granite street, near Thomas & Owen's granite yard, on Friday evening of last week. In the District Court, on Tuesday, Edward Curtain and James Denward were found guilty of the assault, and were each fined $5 and costs.

LOCKED UP. Michael O'Hara, the thief who robbed Andrew Johnson at North Quincy, in 1882, and after a hearing before the District Court escaped from officer Furnald, was once more presented to the District Court on Thursday by officer Furnald, and held in $500 for his appearance before the Grand Jury at the next term of the Superior Court.

THE QUINCY HOUSE. Mr. French having removed from Temple street, makes additional rooms for Mr. Ordway, who informs our readers to-day that he is prepared to furnish lodgings as well as meals to his guests.

TEMPERANCE MEETINGS. To-morrow, Sunday evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be temperance meetings in the various parts of the town, as follows:—

At the Town Hall, William B. Rice presiding, addresses will be made by Rev. Edwin Thompson and B. B. Johnson, Esq.

At the Wollaston Baptist Church, Rev. F. E. Dewhurst presiding, short speeches by Rev. R. T. Sawyer, John O. Hall, Charles W. Carter, George F. Pinkham.

West Quincy, Temperance Hall presiding officer, Rev. F. Furber, addresses by Rev. J. L. Harris and Thaddeus H. Newcomb.

At Atlantic School House, W. T. B. Emery presiding, remarks will be presented by Rev. Edward Norton and Theophilus King, Jr.

At Quincy Point, Congregational Church, presiding officer, John Federhen, 3d, speeches by Rev. D. M. Wilson and Charles A. Foster.

Demands make Prices.

Ten years ago the north-easterly extremities of Quincy, known as Squantum and Moon island were worth but a few thousand dollars. Fifteen thousand dollars would have been thought by some to have been an exhorbitant price. But since Boston has used some portion of this property for their big sewer, it has risen like a sunflower. The Boston Journal says:

"When the improved sewerage system was inaugurated, several years ago, the committee having the matter in charge supposed that they had acquired under a legislative act authorizing the improvement, the fee of the land required at Squantum, and also the fee of the whole of Moon island. After the enterprise had assumed such shape that it was impossible to abandon it, Gen. Butler appeared as a claimant for damages at Squantum, the title of which stood in the name of his son Paul, who, it is understood, became the purchaser of the property for the sum of $30,000, after the work was begun. The committee subsequently awarded General Butler $10,000 for a right of way through Squantum, and nothing more has been done in the premises until recently, when the committee notified Gen. Butler that it was contemplated to erect an additional pumping station at Moon island, and requested him to appear and present his views. Accordingly, on Tuesday afternoon last, General Butler attended the session of the committee, and, after asserting that the city gained nothing more than a right of way by the act of legislature, submitted the four following propositions: To sell the city a sufficient amount of land on which to erect a pumping station, for $10,000; to sell four and a half acres of the property for $21,000; to sell all of the property, except the old hotel known as Reed's, for $45,000; and to sell the entire estate, including the hotel, for $60,000. The committee took no action on either proposition, but it is said that they get no encouragement from the law department in the taking of any measures to resist the claim of General Butler. A similar state of things exists as to Moon island, which is owned by the Huckins heirs of Quincy, for whom General Butler appears as counsel."

☞ The springs and wells will be so full now that we shall not need the water works.

☞ February passed out roughly. The thermometer was at zero at sunrise on yesterday morning, and the cold was quite severe all day. The ground was covered with snow, and the wind blew quite hard, making it one of the most disagreeable days of winter.

☞ Miss Nellie M. Coolidge, the pleasant young lady in the office of the QUINCY PATRIOT, was agreeably surprised Friday noon, in discovering upon her desk, on her return from dinner, a pair of opera glasses accompanied by a card informing her that it was a gift from her associates in the office, in recognition of the quadrennial return of her birthday. Miss Coolidge, her face wreathed in smiles, thanked the donors for their kind remembrance.

☞ An old experienced agriculturist speaking the other day of New England farmers said that "there were those, among them who were very industrious. They ploughed the ground, put nothing into the ground and took nothing out of the ground." Which forcibly, reminded us of the sacred hymn commencing "Naked as from the earth we came, and entered life at first; naked we to the earth return, and mix with kindred dust."

HOLBROOK. During the week ending February 23 only 1060 cases of boots and shoes were shipped owing to the partial destruction of Edmund White's factory and the intervention of a holiday. Mr. White resumed work on Monday, the cutters and stitchers occupying the factory on Union street, and the other departments started up at the uninjured portion of the factory Tuesday.

Quincy Point Items.

The Vulture Engine Company will hold its regular monthly meeting on Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Washington's birthday was passed in a very quiet manner at the Point. The bell was not rung on account of sickness in the community; the Vultures even did not raise the flag on their house, but doubtless we are all patriotic at heart and will show this spirit both to a better advantage in the succeeding holidays.

Sunday evening will be devoted to temperance meetings in each section of the town. At the Congregational Church the meeting will be in charge of Mr. John Federhen 3d and addresses will be made by Rev. D. M. Wilson and Mr. Charles A. Foster of Quincy.

The "Ladies' Aid Society" gave an old fashioned supper Thursday night, postponed the previous evening on account of Republican caucus. Considering the stormy evening there were many present and a thoroughly good time was enjoyed.

This last week in February has not been much of an improvement on the other three, as regards to the weather. Old Prob. has saved himself many hard remarks in this last, by wisely giving fair weather on Monday, the universal washingday. As if to conpensate us for such hard usage—we have been treated to some fine scenes, especially on Wednesday morning when after Tuesday's snow storm which came down so silently in great feathery flakes the trees looked beautiful each limb and branch and twig being loaded with took a morning walk simply to enjoy the spectacle.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a Sociable on Wednesday next. E.M.F.

Washington Letter

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26th, 1884.

A notable event of the week in this city was the meeting and adjournment of the Democratic National committee whose work is now part of the campaign history of '84. The eighth of June and Chicago were selected for the time and place of holding the nominating convention.

The Senate which has given its attention to the McPherson financial bill at every daily session for more than a week, resumed the discussion Monday, and will continue it until a vote is reached on the measure. During this week the House will consider the Congressional library bill and the pleuro-pneumonia bill, both of which passed the Senate. A large number of western cattle men and farmers feeling deeply interested in the latter measure have just petitioned Congress to attend to the matter at its earliest opportunity. When the Mexican Pension bill comes up this week Mr. Browne of Ind., will be ready with an amendment to pension every soldier of the late war who served a year in the Union Army regardless of his present physical condition. This is for the purpose of worrying the Democrats, who say it will not embarrass them in the least, as they will promptly reject it and proceed with their bill. The last measure passed by the House was the appropriation bill for the Military Academy. It gave rise to an extended debate during which many Congressmen expressed their opinions of the curriculum and ways of the West Point school; some calling it an aristocratic institution at which the standard of admission was so high as to preclude the entrance of the sons of the poorer classes who could not have extraordinary preparatory advantages. Others thought it was governed by snobs, and one member called the professors national paupers having under their control Congressmen who were practically afraid of placing restrictions on the institution; while others said West Point was the most important and wisely managed school in the United States. After all this, the Military Academy got the appropriation.

The Senate committee on territories will soon report a bill for the admission of Southern Dakota as a state of the Union, and Alaska is to have a civil government, the same committee having decided on a favorable report of the Senate bill to that effect. Senator Ingalls has said Alaska was the most worthless acquisition with which any government was ever afflicted, but the Senator from Kansas, naturally regards this territory from a standpoint of pleasant inland pastures for raising cattle, wheat and a very able quality of statesmen.

A prohibition convention was held in this city during the week. This was composed of a party which has taken a new departure Addresses were made not only against liquor but against all secret temperance societies, and all secret orders, masonry included. At one of the meetings, Fred. Douglass defined what the colored man wanted, in a lecture on civil rights. The convention nominated Rev. J. B. Blanchard of Ill., for President of the United States, but as the gentleman declined the offer ex-Senator Pomeroy of Kansas was next nominated for President, and Mr. John A. Conant, for Vice-President, subject to the ratification of the prohibition convention to be held at Chicago. During one of the sessions Susan B. Anthony was noticed in the audience, upon which there was a vociferous demand for a speech from her, but in the confusion and applause of the invitation the veteran woman suffragist wrapped her draperies around her and silently stole away. In a series of resolutions adopted by the party was embodied oppositions to all combinations of capitalists and laborers, which result in strikes and distress. A uniform national currency was favored, also the recognition of the Bible in the public schools.

On Tuesday the President will hold the last of his official receptions, to which the members of the Cabinet, and Supreme Court, officers of the Army and Navy, Senators and Representatives, have been invited by card to meet the Diplomatic corps. On Thursday the President will give a Congressional dinner. ADAMS.

A Query.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

Can it be possible that the citizens of Quincy are about to combine the Road Commissioner and the Quincy Water Company? It certainly looks like it when Dr. Faxon, a prominent member of the water board, is nominated on the road commission. The people of Quincy have suffered quite enough this winter from the outrageous manner in which the Water Company left the roads, and I should like to ask you what relief we can hope for, with a member of the water board serving the town as a Road Commissioner?

FAIR PLAY.

Republican Caucus.

The Republicans held their caucus for the nomination of candidates for town offices, at the Town Hall, on Wednesday. The attendance was large and the order excellent. W. W. Adams called the meeting to order, and Charles H. Porter was elected Chairman, and W. W. Adams, Secretary. The following candidates were nominated in the meeting, and elected by nearly unanimous votes:

Town Clerk, George L. Gill.

Town Treasurer, Horace B. Spear.

Selectmen and Assessors, George H. Field, Elias A. Perkins, Christopher A. Spear.

School Committee for three years, Mrs. Adelaide A. Claflin, Sylvester Brown.

Trustees of the Public Library for three years, Luther W. Anderson, Frederick A. Claflin.

Managers of Adams Academy for three years, John Q. Adams, Peter Butler.

Managers Mount Wollaston Cemetery for two years, George L. Baxter, Joseph H. Vogle.

Commissioner of Sinking Fund for three years, Rupert F. Claflin.

Tax Collector, George H. Locke.

Road Commissioner for three years, William L. Faxon.

Constables, Joseph Warren Hayden, Edward A. Spear, Washington M. French, Napoleon B. Furnald, Charles N. Hunt, Edward H. Richardson, Mark E. Hanson, Samuel B. Turner, Edward A. Spear, William C. Seelye, George H. Locke, George O. Langley, Amos M. Litchfield, [illegible] E. Wight.

The only real thing of interest in the caucus was a little discussion as to the expediency of making a change in the school committee board, by nominating one or more ladies. Short and eloquent speeches were made by E. E. Williamson, Henry H. Faxon, Edwin W. Marsh, T. King, Jr., Charles A. Foster, George A. Litchfield, D. M. Wilson and others. The meeting came to the conclusion that it was a good time to make a change, as the two gentlemen, Messrs. Marsh and Sheen, whose term expires at this time, decline serving longer on the board, it gave a favorable opportunity of trying the experiment, if it can be called thus. Many other towns have placed ladies on the school Board, with a benefit. The nomination made, however, does not give perfect satisfaction to all members of the party. Some think the placing of a master of one of the Boston schools on the ticket is not wise, and will work an injury to our schools by taking away from time to time some of our best teachers.

The nomination of William L. Faxon for Road Commissioner also occasioned some discussion. Some think the awful condition our streets have been left in by the Water Company needs some one of wisdom and good judgment to see that the town's interests are looked after; and in this selfish world they do not believe that a member of the Water Board would be the right man.

Christ Church.

The Rev. Mr. Osborne will preach at Christ Church next Sunday morning on "The Church Temperance Society." This society is founded on the same principles as that of the Church of England.

Recognizing temperance as the Law of the Gospel, and total abstinence as a rule of expediency in certain cases, and fully and freely according to every man the right to decide in the exercise of his Christian liberty, whether or not he will adopt said rule this society lays down the basis on which it rests, and from which its work shall be conducted, a union and co-operation on equal terms for the promotion of temperance between those who use moderately and those who abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating drinks as beverages.

Foremost among the means recommended by this society is daily prayer for God's blessing on all efforts, and as for secondary means:

I. Systematic teaching on the physical, social and moral evils of intemperance.

II. The formation of Diocesan and Parochial societies.

III. Counter attractions where feasible, such as the promotion of coffee houses, workingmen's benefit societies and associations, reading rooms, for amusement as well as instruction.

IV. Total abstinence from all intoxicating beverages; to be urged on the intemperate: (a) As a measure of physical necessity. (b) As the first step to true repentance. (c) As an instru- [illegible] being placed solely upon the power and grace of Almighty God sought in the use of all the appointed means of grace.

To be recommended to the temperate: (a) Whenever placed in special peril. (b) Whenever prudence or medical advice shall require it as a measure of preservation; and also (c) whenever any, by thus abridging his liberty, may be able to help his weaker brother, or to remove a stumbling block out of his way.

To be recommended especially to the young as a safeguard against temptation.

Believing in and thoroughly endorsing such broad, tolerant and scriptural principles which go to the root of the whole matter, without sacrificing the right of private liberty which belongs to every man. I earnestly commend its careful consideration as brought before us next Sunday morning by the secretary of the society, the Rev. E. W. Osborne. H. E. COTTON, Rector Christ Church.

Squantum Items.

We made a visit to Moon Island, a few days since, and found the "improved sewerage" working in good shape. The machinery is all in for hoisting the gates, and in all it is a great piece of mechanism. The brick sewer across "the dump," so called, is not laid yet, and a temporary wooden one has been built on piling on the north side of the dump to carry the sewage to the huge tanks or reservoir on the island; and it will, in all probability, be used for some years, until the dump is done settling. We were told that the present reservoir was not large enough to receive all the sewage in case of sudden storms, and that they were contemplating building another large reservoir adjoining the one now there. There was talk of having them roofed over, in case any disagreeable odor came from the sewage; at present, there is hardly any odor to be perceived on the island; only a slight smell like that of sour suds water. I venture to say that as yet there has not been any smell perceivable 1000 feet away.

We next started for the mainland, Squantum, and observed Mr. D. Hall, contractor, is making preparations for grading and putting loom on the dump preparatory to seeding it down, making when done, a pretty and pleasant drive as the masonry and mechanism displayed on the island will repay anyone for driving there.

We were next taken over to the pumping station, situated near Crescent avenue, and were shown themammoth engine and pump. Not being much of a machinist, I am unable to make any explanations relative to this complicated and gigantic piece of machinery, but was told by the kind and gentlemanly engineer in charge, that at each revolution of the large fly wheel that the pump lifted 1694 gallons of sewage; and that the wheel made eleven revolutions per minute, pumping 18,638 gallons per minute. There are two of these pumps, and both being at work would of course pump twice that quantity.

We then started for home well paid for our trouble of taking the day's journey. HAWKEYE FIRST.

Letter from New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20, 1884.

The son of Dr. Leopold Damrosch, a gentleman well-known here as a musical genius and one highly talented, has been engaged to play the organ and conduct the singing in Henry Ward Beecher's Plymouth Church, for one year, beginning May 1st. The new organist is but twenty years of age, but has studied music under his father, as well as abroad, and is considered an accomplished musician. The Plymouth Church chorus choir will consist of sixty members, most of whom will be volunteers from the congregation.

By constant use the Bridge cable had, up to Saturday night, of the 16th ult., stretched over a hundred feet. Early Sunday morning the machinery was stopped and the work of cutting off 102 feet of the wire strands was begun. The undertaking was actually completed in a little over seven hours, and everything was in perfect running order shortly after 7 A. M. This is said to be the shortest time in which so large a cable was ever spliced.

The following is an outline of a report presented to the committee of fifty-three appointed recently on Charter Reform, by a sub-committee appointed at the last meeting of the full committee:

It was urged, first,—that the immediate passage of Mr. Roosevelt's bill taking the confirming power from the Board of Aldermen should be insisted upon; second,—that no time should be lost by the committee of fifty-three in putting said bill through; and, third,—that the full committee go at once to Albany and remain there until the bill is passed. This report was unanimously accepted and the meeting adjourned to Albany. W. L. M.

Quincy Soldiers of 1863 & '64.

The military committee of the Legislature met at the State house on Tuesday last, to consider the petition of M. M. C. Chubbuck and others of Quincy, for an act, allowing the town to pay certain bounties to soldiers who re-enlisted in the field in the winter of '63 and '64.

Representative Pattee of Quincy, presented the case of the petitioners. He said that the men who enlisted at home on the quota of Quincy received $125 each, while by act of the Legislature those who reinlisted in the field were debarred from receiving it. In 1866 the town voted to pay all soldiers on the town quota $125. All he asked was an act allowing the town to raise money to pay the men who reinlisted in the field between Dec. 15th, 1863, and April 15th, 1864, and who served to the close of the war or were honorably discharged. No one was present in an official way to oppose it, but Henry H. Faxon rose, just as the hearing was about to close and said he didn't appear in any one's interest, but to protect the town's interest. He did not like to oppose this measure, but he thought the time had come when sentimentalism had better be swept one side, and some one ought to look out for the interests of those who stayed at home. He knew that some of the petitioners were loafers, and spent their money in dram shops, and thought that such men ought not to be paid.

Mr. Curry of the committee suggested that he ought to show they were loafers at the time they were reinlisted or else it had no bearing on the case.

Mr. Faxon replied that they were loafers then and had been ever since.

A member of the committee asked Mr. Faxon where he and his property would have been had these loafers staid at home. Mr. Faxon made no reply. [illegible] "Mr. Faxon don't you suppose the town of Quincy thought these men had a just claim, when in 1866 they voted to pay them $125 each?"

Mr. Faxon replied, "yes, and I think they will vote it again."

Mr. Faxon then said that there were always men who could be hired to bring these petitions, and he thought the thing had better be brought to a stop. He did not think that the men who volunteered to go to the front had any more claim on the town than a business man who went into business and lost money.

Mr. Snow of the committee, then asked Mr. Faxon if he had any evidence to show that Mr. Pattee had been retained in this case.

Mr. Faxon said: "Of course I can't prove that."

"Then," said Mr. Snow, "do you think it is right to make such a statement?"

Mr. Pattee then said: "I want to ask Mr. Faxon if he by heresay or otherwise has ever heard that I was to receive in any way any pecuniary benefit."

Mr. Faxon replied: "Oh, of course Mr. Pattee is too shrewd to let any one know it." Then he continued by saying that he supposed that his course would make him unpopular in Quincy. "But," said he, "Thank God I am unpopular with certain classes in that town."

At this point Chairman Trull said, with emphasis: "This hearing is closed."

Resolutions.

At a meeting of the Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., held in their hall on Thursday evening, the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, Henry H. Faxon, while acting as a citizen of the town of Quincy, in the interest of the town and without any authority from the same, at a hearing before a committee on military affairs at the State House, on a question of paying bounties due certain soldiers accredited to the quota of the town, during the late war, has insulted every true soldier by designating the petitioners who appeared before the committee as "dram shop loafers," who if they received the money asked for would expend it in a "dram shop," therefore be it

Resolved, By Post 88, G. A. R., representing the soldier element of Quincy, that it throws back the insult as untrue and uncalled for, and demands a public apology.

Resolved, That we deny the assertion made by the said H. H. Faxon that the stay-at-homes are entitled to the same consideration as we who went to the front in the hour of our country's need.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to every Post of the G. A. R. in the Department of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That a copy be also sent to the National Tribune at Washington, D. C.

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be printed in the Quincy PATRIOT.

ALMSHOUSE STATISTICS. The Legislative Committee on Public Charities have received from the Inspector of Charities a computation showing the weekly cost of more than 2600 paupers in 1883, supported in 42 cities and towns of Massachusetts, which had in 1880 a population of 1,035,664; that is, very nearly three-fifths of the whole population of the State. The average weekly cost for all these city and town paupers was $2.53, after deducting certain reimbursements made by other cities and towns in the State. The average weekly cost at Tewksbury during the same period was about $1.83, before deducting such reimbursements and $1.64 after making these deductions at Tewksbury.

It would therefore seem that the cities and towns pay an average rate for their almshouse cases nearly 50 per cent. higher than the State pays at Tewksbury. The computations are based upon the statements annually made by each city and town, and are exact so far as these statements are correct; but there may be some error in particular instances. Of the general accuracy of the result there can be little question.

It appears from the table published that it cost Quincy per week for each pauper $5.39; a larger amount than any other town except Milton, which paid $5.90.

For the Patriot.

Shade Trees Along our Streets.

For the expense, no improvement adds more to the appearance and comfort of a street than shade trees along its walks. Quincy streets are many of them not only a reproach to the abuttors, but the town. Nothing to cover their nakedness and shield the footman from the pelting rays of a summer sun. The Western villages in many of the states are far in advance of us in their neat and shady comforts,—not fifty years old and yet beautiful in walks and shades. At a recent forestry meeting at Cincinnati, the Governor took an active part, and warmly seconded the plans proposed for bounties to encourage tree planting. New York has offered similar encouragement to tree associations.

Our friends at Atlantic made a noble start last spring in tree planting. Wollaston had quite an encouraging spasm a few years ago, and but for the stupidity and stinginess of occasional thriftless abuttors and outside speculators, all her principal streets would now be ornamented by shades and nice gravelled walks. The expense is a mere trifle in comparison with the ornament to the streets and the comfort to us and our posterity. Will the town favor an appropriation for such main thoroughfares as Washington and Hancock streets and Newport and Quincy avenues? Sugar maples can be set and warranted, for eighty-five cents each. Will our citizens show some public spirit in forwarding this measure? The grounds and walks of the Adamses are a model for other of our private estates. A. W. S.

☞ Business an active business is carried on at Paine's furniture manufacturing establishement in Boston. Their custom and retail trade now demands nearly the entire block of four acres in floor room. From this immense establishment thousands of homes are furnished at a cost so much under the usual price that people come from a long distance and save money by it.

☞ Times have not been so dull in Aroostook Maine, the settlers say, for twenty years. Potatoes, hay and oats are so low that the farmers do not care to sell. Potatoes were sold at Fort Fairfield, Saturday, for 30 cents a barrel. One farmer, whose crop was 700 barrels, jocularly remarked that if he had raised 700 barrels more he would be on the town. Large quantities of hay can be bought in some of the back towns for $4 per ton.

TO VOTERS.

FELLOW CITIZENS:

Once more, in view of the approaching town election, we urge one another, regardless of party, sect, or nationality, to speak and vote for No license. For two years we have tried the no-license plan, and it has approved itself in the promotion of order and prosperity, manhood and the delights of home, beyond the expectations of the most sanguine.

The law we laid down at the last two elections has been enforced. In the beginning it was objected that the law would be a dead letter, but it has been enforced. The NO of the people has meant something; the action of the town and the conduct of its officers has been a conspicuous example of popular sincerity, which cannot but exalt the general conception of law.

As a consequence of this law and the due enforcement of it, about $125,000, which, it has been estimated, would have passed through the hands of liquor dealers the last year, have been happily diverted into purer channels, bringing life to the home and larger gains to honorable trade.

Temptation having been removed from the path of the workman, he has grown more regular in his habits, and has found himself able to get comforts for wife and children, and to pay honestly as he goes. To this many who know the facts voluntarily testify. As the saloous vanished, order, ambition, prosperity have come to many a household.

It was feared at the beginning of winter, owing to the state of business, that the present season would be a hard one for many workmen, and that much charitable aid would be called for. But no increase of the dependent class has been noticed; rather, in proportion to the population, it has shown a decrease. This, in some measure, is due to the more temperate habits of the people. Of the worst of such cases as are under the care of the charities of the town, it is to be said that they were brought to pauperism by years of intemperance, and such hopeed their redemption as is still possible is encouraged mainly by the belief that the temptations of the open saloon will still be with held.

The quietness, temperateness, and law-abiding character of the people has been notable. The impression prevails, indeed, that our town has made a decided advance in morals and public spirit. To this not alone has the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors contributed, but also the active responsibility aroused in the majority for the well-being of the community. Like charity, this temperance agitation is "twice blest; it blesseth" the weak by removing temptations; it blesseth the strong in the quickening of their interest in their fellow beings.

The question, then, recurs: Shall we not keep what we have won? It is far easier to hold the field than to fight the fight all over again. The exercise of that eternal vigilance which is the price to be paid for all our most precious privileges,—a little attention and a little time once more given by all,—and for another twelve months we shall be secure in the order and prosperity of the past year. No one can be indifferent to this question. No parent who desires his children should not be led into temptation can be indifferent. No house-holder knowing the danger to life and property from intemperance, can be indifferent. No friend of his kind and country, who sees the portentious problems which are to be solved by a virtuous populace alone, can be indifferent. It is a vital question, affecting all our interests, moral and material. Even persons not prepared to commit themselves to the principles of prohibition in general must see that for us here in Quincy it is highest wisdom to declare again that licenses to sell intoxicating liquors shall not be granted.

Last year Quincy led the towns of the State in the number of "No" votes cast by its citizens. We must do this again. To the selfishness of liquor dealers and the strength of lawless passions shall we not say emphatically NO? With the most sacred interests at stake—self-respecting manhood, the purity of home, the moral tone of the community—shall we not say NO, many thousands times NO? Shall we not join with all who love this ancient town, with all who desire to see its inhabitants prosperous and happy, with all most interested in the well being of their fellowmen, in the utterance of a decisive, not-to-be-questioned NO?

Respectfully,
THEOPHILUS KING, JR., Chairman,

REV. D. M. WILSON,

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 1, 1884.

For the Patriot.

The Star.

My sky was dark and dreary,
My life was full of care,
Till God, in loving mercy,
Placed a bright star shining there.

It guided my faltering footsteps
O'er the sands of unbelief,
In every time of trial
It brought my soul relief.

Till at length my footsteps rested
By faith in the Saviour's word;
Then the star from my vision faded,
And a low "Good bye" I heard.

"God's will?" It may be, I know not,
My faith is not so clear
That I can discern the blessing
In a sky so dark and drear.

Yet whatever may be the reason,
God's word is just and true,
So I'll follow with faith unfaltering,
Tho' the star be lost to view.

ALDEN H. DAY.

Farm and Garden.

Potatoes.

Mr. Charles O. Ellms, of Scituate, writes to the Massachusetts Ploughman as follows:—

It is often remarked that we do not raise so large crops of potatoes as were raised years ago when we were boys, as though the raising of large crops were among the lost arts. I believe if the proper method is taken we will have no trouble to raise as large crops now as then. Take land that has been in grass, plough under a good quantity of manure and plant even one year; the next year plough in more manure and fertilizers in the drill, plant potatoes, and you will have a crop like those we are reminded of, and I am verified by the following statements:

Geo. O. Allen, of Scituate, raised on one acre 350 bushels of potatoes; the acre had corn on it the year before. Sea manure was spread on one half, and barn manure on the other half, and ploughed in. It was planted in drills three and one-half feet apart, with Bradley's phosphate; on four rows, without the fertilizer, made a deficiency of twelve bushels.

D. S. Jenkins raised twelve acres of potatoes averaging 200 bushels per acre; some acres exceeded that amount, others less, owing to drouth. One acre of sward he ploughed a straight furrow, a man following dropped the seed potato on the land side, then doing the same on every third furrow, using Stockbridge's fertilizer, until he ploughed the whole piece. He raised 200 bushels on that acre.

J. W. Sampson, an extensive farmer, has planted potatoes under the sward, and has no trouble in raising as large crops as in olden time.

E. E. Ellms, of the neighboring town of Cohasset, raised last season 480 bushels of potatoes on one acre, and 512 on another. It had corn the year before (130 bushels per acre), sea weed (eel grass) and barn manure were ploughed under; it was planted in drills twenty inches apart, with Buffalo fertilizer.

EXPORTATION. The growth of the exportation of products of agriculture from the United States constitutes the most important feature of the development of our foreign commerce. The value of such exports amounted in 1850 to only $108,605,713; in 1860 to $256,560,972; in 1870 to $361,188,483; and in 1883 to $619,269,449, against $552,219,819 during the preceding fiscal year. For many years the value of the exports of the products of agriculture has ranged from seventy-two to eighty-three per cent. of the total value of exports of domestic merchandise from this country.

☞ Now is the time that the horse will show care. A horse well kept in winter is better able to endure the hard work of summer.

Anecdotes.

Doctor: "There, get that prescription filled and take a tablespoonful three times a day before meals."
Pauper patient: "But, doctor, I don't get but one meal in two days."

"Your father is entirely bald now, isn't he?" said an Austin man to the son of a millionaire.
"Yes," replied the youth, sadly, "I'm the only heir he has left."

"Rebecca," said Mose Schuumberg, an Austrian tin merchant prince, to his wife, "I vants you to gif me your photograph."
"Und vat in de world do you vant mit mine photograph?" inquired the wife.
"I vants to paste it on my pipe. Times was so pad that I vants to break mineself of schmoking," answered Mose.

"Yes," said the doctor, "you are certainly threatened with scarlet fever."
"What shall I do, what shall I do?" she moaned, in great distress. "Oh, doctor, couldn't you throw it into some other kind of a fever? Scarlet is so trying to my complexion."

"Is this the singing doll?" asked she of the clerk.
"Yes, mademoiselle."
"How do you make it sing?"
"Just as you would any other young lady."
"How is that?"
"By pressing it."
"Oh!"

"Ah," said the nice young man with bangs, as the little boy let him in the other evening; "ah, my little man, is your sister at home?"
"Yes, she's home, but she ain't expecting you."
"And how do you know she isn' expecting me?"
"'Cause I heard her tell ma you are too mean to hire a horse and sleigh, and she didn't expect to see a sign of you while the snow lasted."

"RED JACKET BITTERS."

While the Globe cannot be expected to know as to the reliability of all the statements of its advertisers, it will not publish anything improper or that it does not have reason to believe is reliable. Nor, on the other hand, is it in the habit of giving an editorial endorsement to patent medicines, but in the case of the Red Jacket Bitters, extensively advertised in this issue, it is proper to say that the proprietor of the medicine brought a personal letter from a gentleman occupying one of the highest official positions in the state endorsing the merit of both the proprietor and the goods.

Elsewhere will be found an advertisement of the celebrated bitters and the testimonials of persons who have used them with good results. The bitters are really meritorious, and we have no fear in recommending them. They can be procured at almost any drug store.

Licenses.

"We have suspected that there is a misapprehension of opinion in regard to the expression of opinion at the last municipal election on this difficult subject of licenses. The statute requires, rather stupidly, that people shall vote either for 'license' or 'no license.' The large class of people who wish to have a restricted license, but do not believe in the working of prohibition, ought, in strictness, not to vote at all. In fact, the greater part of them do not. In a full vote of about 53,752, 17,508 people declined to vote on the issue presented to them. Of those who voted, only 22,970 voted for license, and 13,274 voted for none. The curious fact is thus revealed that not more than 12,500 persons of the purchasing class voted for the maintenance of the 3,500 bars which are now licensed. For it seems to be substantially shown that, on the average, each license represents three voters personally interested in the daily sale of liquor. In other words, when it comes to the annual decision by law whether the open bars shall be sustained, they are sustained, firstly by those who sell the liquor; secondly, by a number about equal of those who drink it. Of course this class number two does not buy enough liquor to keep the bars in operation. As a matter of daily practice, the bars have the further support of the people from the country, of whom we have spoken.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Household Receipts.

BAKED INDIAN BREAD. One cup molasses, three cups flour, two cups sour milk, four cups sweet milk, five cups meal, one tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of soda; bake two hours.

CORN BREAD. Make the sponge the same way, with scalded Indian meal; add salt and syrup, but thicken with fine wheat flour altogether. Let it rise, and steam and bake. Excellent.

FRITTERS. One cup new milk, three eggs, a pinch of salt, flour to make a stiff batter.

POP OVERS. One egg, one cup sweet milk, one cup flour, a pinch of salt; bake same as gems.

SOFT STIRRED BISCUIT. One quart of sour milk, one tea-spoonful soda; add flour to make a thick batter, and bake on pie tins.

Apples sliced very thin, fried in hot butter and sprinkled with pulverized sugar, make a very nice dish for tea or luncheon.

Plug up mice holes with soap. The mice will not go through.

To select nutmegs, prick them with a pin. If they are good, the oil will instantly spread around the puncture.

Carrots boiled and then browned in butter are an appetizing dish.

If a little kerosene is mixed with stove polish, it will greatly assist in improving the look of rusty stoves.

To remove a glass stopper, drop some glycerine in the surrounding crevice, and after an hour or two it will be sure to loosen.

This and That.

☞ Never kick at an infuriated bull dog when you have slippers on.

☞ Never jump out of bed in the morning before you hear the first bell.

☞ "Oh, you needn't worry," she retorted, "I would not kiss you even if the freckles on your face were gold dollars."

☞ A young lady in a Boston office is so peculiar about her personal appearance that she always takes a peep in the mirror before answering a call to the telephone.

☞ "Here's a fly in my soup, waiter." "Yes, sir; very sorry, sir; but you can throw away the fly and eat the soup, can't you?" "Of course, I can. You didn't expect me to throw away the soup and eat the fly, did you?"

☞ "Walk slower, papa," cried the little girl whose steps were no match for the strides of her masculine progenitor; "Can't you go nice and slow, like a policeman?"

☞ Yu will observe this, the devil never offers to go into partnership with a busy man, but yu will often see him offer to jine the lazy, and furnish all the capital, besides.—Josh Billings.

☞ "What is the next thing to a dude?" was asked in a fashionable parlor the other evening. One lady answered an ape, another an orang-outang, but when a little girl said the next thing to a dude is his undershirt, the subject was suddenly dropped.

☞ "What are these cups for?" asked a well-dressed man of a jeweler, pointing to some elegant silver cups on the show-case. "These are race cups, to be given as prizes to the best racer." "If that's so, suppose you and I race for one," and the stranger, with the cup in hand, started, the jeweler after him. The stranger won the cup.

☞ I suppose you often want something to fill up your paper with?" said a man coming into a country newspaper office with a four column communication on a patent, duplex, double-back-action harrow of his own invention. "Oh, no," said the man of the quill, the paper is full enough! It is the editor who wants something to fill up with. This will make four columns and two sticks—forty-two dollars, please.

Conundrums.

Why should a clergyman always wear well-fitting clothes? He should never be a man of loose habits.

Why is love like a canal boat? It is an internal transport.

Why are ladies who paint, fond of literature? They are well red (read).

When does a dog become larger and when smaller? When he is let out at night, and taken in in the morning.

Why should hen's feathers be smooth? They always carry their combs.

Why is a newspaper like the blood of a healthful man? Much depends upon the circulation.

Why do day and night resemble two banks stopping payment at the same time? One breaks when the other fails.

Stop that Cough.

Coughs and colds are prevalent now especially among children, too often from the ignorance or carelessness of their elder guardians. Many mothers appear to accept with resignation the repeated and violent colds from which their children suffer as providential and unavoidable. A cold is by no means always due to exposure. Indigestion, constipation, a lack of scrupulous cleanliness, the unwise habit of sleeping in much of the clothing worn during the day, unaired bed chambers; all or any of these may have far more to do with your child's tendency to cold than the keenest breath of the bracing winter air. And in a great measure these are under your control. Mothers should understand that it is a fact, whether they can see how it is or not, that numerous colds and sore throats are directly traceable to indigestion and dietetic errors. Quantities of greasy food, fried meats, pastry and the like, ill-ventilated rooms, and continued constipation, have to answer for many cases of croup, and putrid sore throats.

All these things weaken the system and render it far less able to resist change of temperature. Give every bedroom a thorough airing every day, more especially if several children are obliged to sleep together, or with their parents. This is to be avoided, if possible; if not, always lower a window slightly from the top, or if this cannot be done, raise from below. There is frequently bad air enough generated and breathed in the sleeping apartment of a family with small children to supply them all not only with colds, but a number of so-called "malarious" diseases to last a year, perhaps longer. Neglect of bathing is another prolific source of colds. A child from three to ten years old should certainly receive an entire bath twice a week in winter. A warm bath at night, taking special care to avoid any chill after, will frequently break up a sudden cold. Keep children from playing in chilly, unused rooms in autumn and winter weather. Let them play out of doors as much as possible, taking care to have their feet warm and dry. A flannel suit and rubber overshoes will often save much cough medicine and doctor's bills. Keep them warmly clad, but do not be content with thick coats and worsted hoods, while short skirts barely cover their knees, leaving the limbs chilled.—American Agriculturist for February.

How Does This Read?

A correspondent of one of our Boston dailies writes concerning the appearance of the House of Representatives at Washington, during the night session which was devoted to the discussion of the Mexican soldiers' pension bill. He says: "As is always the case at night sessions, there was much noise, much confusion, and a little drunkenness. There was bad blood shown on one or two occasions, due mainly to the inability of members to understand each other. The "little drunkenness" was the cause, no doubt, of all the noise, bad blood, and the inability of members to understand each other. We have seen the same condition of things at a "shake" for turkeys.

Woman.

Place her among flowers, foster her as a tender plant, and she is a thing of fancy, waywardness and folly—annoyed by a dew-drop, fretted by the touch of a butterfly's wing, and ready to faint at the sound of a beetle, and is overpowered by the perfume of a rose-bud. But let real calamity come, rouse her affections, enkindle the fires of her heart, and mark her then; how strong is her heart; place her in the heat of the battle—give her a child, a bird—anything to protect—and see her in a relative instance, lifting her white arms as a shield, as her own blood crimsons her upturned forehead, praying for life to protect the helpless.

Transplant her in the dark places of earth, call forth her energies to action, and her breath becomes a healing, her presence a blessing. She disputes, inch by inch, the stride of the stalking pestilence, when man, the strong and brave, pale and affrighted, shrinks away. Misfortune haunts her not; she wears away a life of silent endurance; and goes forward with less timidity than to her bridal. In prosperity she is a bud full of odors, waiting but for the winds of adversity to scatter them abroad—pure gold, valuable, but untried in the furnace. In short, woman is a miracle—a mystery, the centre from which radiates the great charm of existence.

Poetry.

Three Words of Strength.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words, as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light
Upon the hearts of men.

Have hope, though clouds environ now,
And gladness hides her face in scorn;
Put thou the shadow from thy brow,
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith! Where'er thy bark is driven,
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth,
Know this—God rules the host of heaven,
Th' inhabitants of earth.

Have love! Not love alone for one,
But man, as man, thy brothers call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, faith and love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind.

—Schiller.

Miscellany.

BESIDE THE FLUME.

In the spring of 1852 four miners built their cabin on the bank of a brawling stream that, with frothing lips, leaped down from one of the grand mountain fastnesses of the Golden State.

Then they constructed a solidly built dam of logs completely across the stream, which they named Clear river, thus shutting off the water from its bed, the overflow escaping by a long race-way or flume.

In the dry bed of the river was located Clear River Mine, and the miners soon found all their labors well rewarded; for the sands of the mountain torrent literally shone with gold, that had been torn from some crumbling quartz ledge that had bared its breast to the turbulent waters for centuries, or from many a tortured bowlder whirled along in a crazy dance in the river's cold embrace.

The last ounce of shining dust had been taken from the delicate scales, and the four men grouped around the rude table, looked into each other's eyes that shone brighter with the light of success, than the gold for which they had so patiently toiled.

"Ten thousand dollars, boys—$2,500 a share!" laughed one of the brown-faced miners. "That's a pretty good showing for a month of rocking the cradle. A few more dividends like that and then I reckon that I'll go home. There's a little woman in a little brown house I know of that will be glad to see me—bless her brave little heart!"

Home! The four partners in the Clear River Mine were all from the far away East, and at that word stern faces softened, and more than one hand involuntarily sought a ragged breast, wherein was concealed a precious packet of well-worn letters from loved ones over the mountains.

But one of them—a frank-faced young fellow—arose from the table, glanced half-anxiously, half-hesitatingly at his companions, then turned from them and went to the little cabin window and looked out into the night.

"What's the trouble with you Upton?" was the general inquiry.

Upton strode uneasily toward his fellow-miners.

"I cannot answer your questions, boys; for, the truth of it is, I don't know myself. I can only say that a feeling as if we were in mortal danger this very moment is upon me, and I can't shake it off."

A laugh went around the table—a hearty, ringing laugh—the laugh of men who scorn the thought of danger, and yet they could not but feel impressed by the young fellow's earnestness.

Upton joined in the laugh at his expense; but that strange, far-off look as of one whose spirit is not with the body, never left his face.

He went back to the window again, and then threw open the cabin door, turned his head and said, pleasantly, "I'll be with you in a short time, boys!" and then the door closed behind him.

There was neither sparkle of star nor the faintest gleam of the moon to lighten the shadows into which he plunged. The air was soft and warm against his face as a woman's breath. No sound came to his ear save the roar of the frothing flume, which was the width of the river bed from the cabin.

Upton decended the steep bank and began to pick his way over the rough stones of the claim, with the great face of the dam rising up at his side like some huge prison wall.

He stopped and listened a moment. He heard queer little gurgles—faint, soft, lapping sounds—a soft, subdued swash, as of hurrying waters; and yet, after all, there was a certain, ruthless calm about those strong, unseen floods behind that cool, dark wall, that bore evidence of immense power.

Thud! It was as if some mighty, Titanic missles had been hurled against the walls. It was only an uptorn tree, borne with terrific force against the dam several feet above his head.

"How the river has crept up since night-fall. I knew the rain of the last two days would cause a rise; but this looks serious. Luckily the dam will stand the pressure of a common flood!"

He laid his ear close to one of the projecting timbers of the dam.

"That immense weight of water doesn't even jar it!" he muttered.

Picking his way over the rocky river bed was no easy matter in that thick obscurity; but his familiarity with every foot of the locality helped him, and in a short time he stood before the flume.

Ah, here was uproar enough! The flume was full to the very topmost plank. A hiss of flying spray struck him sharply in the face; but he gave no heed to the ice-cold drops that clung to his forehead.

That strange premonitory, haunting feeling had enwrapped his every sense.

Upton felt, rather than thought, that somewhere out in this cool darkness lurked danger, and he knew not how, or in what shape it was to come.

He had walked a long distance down by the side of the flume, when he heard a sharp clatter among the rocks of the dry river-bed as of some one stumbling heavily, followed by a muttered curse.

That voice! He knew it, and he shut his teeth sharply to keep back an exclamation of horror.

Sam Lomax, the road agent, the terror of the honest, hard-working miner in whatsoever mine, together with his merciless band of renegades and Indians, was creeping up the river-bed, and this midnight raid meant death to the four partners of the Clear River Mine.

Rallying every energy he turned and fled up the river-bed as for dear life. Not of his own danger was he thinking, but rather of the peril of the unarmed men in the little cabin yonder—his "pads" who had become endeared to him through the many months of weary privation and toil, so cheerily shared together; his comrades, unto whom his soul clove with love as strong as that of a brother.

Why did objects beside him, before him, become so distinct? He threw up his head as he ran.

The clouds were parting, and he perceived that in a few moments their friendly aid would be withdraw. The moon would burn like some great watchfire in the heavens, and his flight would be revealed to those merciless eyes not a pistol shot away.

The odds were all against him. Strain every energy, every nerve as he might, to-morrow's sun would look down on four victims to Lomax and his band, and the dear folks at home would look in vain for those whose bones were whitening by a rotting dam in those western wilds.

The dam! An inspiration, born of dire necessity, leaped into his mind, and a light flamed forth in his eyes. The strength of hope sprang up in his heart and swung every nerve, and on he sped.

The dam loomed up before him. He sprang to a little locker, built for convenience sake, close by the end of the dam, threw up the cover, seized a box of blasting powder, thrust it under one of the projecting supports of the dam, lighted a short fuse, thrust one end in the keg, and then turned and fled.

And the moon burst forth from behind the clouds, her calm, pale light falling softly over all that the darkness had hid.

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed the happy trio, still sitting around the cabin table, as one of their number finished relating some anecdote of his rollicking college days; and the laugh was still echoing when the door was suddenly burst open, and Upton, with face as white as a death mark, stood on the threshold. He made a beckoning motion, and then disappeared.

The miners sprang to their feet, but even as they did so, a loud explosion deafened their ears, and a terrible thrill rocked the little cabin like a cradle. With one impulse they leaped to the door.

They saw the whole front of the dam move out in one mass, one instant transfigured by the light of the moon into a stately wall of burnished silver, the next broken and sheathed in a glorious sheeting spray.

And then a torrent with foaming crest leaped down over its own highway, from which it had been shut out so long, stripping bare the foundation of the dam and driving the flume before it.

The miners on the bank stood dumb, but the men in the path of the opened floodgates uttered one cry as the dark death touched them; and then all was silent save for the mighty song of the waters, which rang up to the mountain top.

The miners heard that last cry of despair, and their hearts seemed to stop in horror. They turned to Upton, who was standing near them, and saw that he was staggering like one beneath whose feet the solid earth was rocking.

Strong arms knit around him, and he was supported into the cabin.

The door and windows of the cabin were barred, and then they crowded around Upton, who had sunk on his rude couch, and one question burst from every lip:

"What was that cry, Upton?"

The story of Upton was briefly told. When he had finished three strong right hands were stretched forth toward him.

He gave each a hearty grasp in turn, and that silent handshaking expressed more than could have been put into words.

But after dam and flume had been rebuilt, the mine no longer wore the name of Clear River. It had been changed into Upton in honor of the brave young "pard" who had saved the lives of his friends and himself on the night he walked down by the flume.

Not far Enough Advanced.

"Pa," said a bright little girl to her fond father, "why can't I go to a minstrel show some time? I should like to, ever so much; and there couldn't be any harm in it, could there?"

"My child," answered the kind parent, with much feeling, "it would not do for you to attend a minstrel show at your tender age. You are not yet sufficiently versed in ancient history, and some of the jokes, I am afraid, would prove too much for you. You are not advanced enough to appreciate the classics."

Ventilation of School-Rooms.

A school-room that is solely dependent on open windows for ventilation is unfit for use during the greater part of the year. Children sitting near the windows cannot be exposed to draughts and except in warm weather such rooms cannot be thoroughly ventilated in this way. The device of fitting boards under the window, so as to separate the sashes in the middle and admit fresh air without creating a current, is used in hospitals, but does not meet the requirements of a crowded school-room. The ventilation of school-buildings ought not to be left to chance, but should be systematically provided for. Children are tender plants that thrive in fresh air, and droop, spindle, and wither in foul air. One of the best proofs that the air in school-rooms is too often unfit for children to breathe is the prevalence of near-sightedness among the older pupils. The eye, being the most delicate bit of mechanism of the whole body, requires the best blood which the physical system can command, and consequently suffers more than any other organ when vitiated by the inhalation of foul air, year after year. To near-sightedness are added many other positive indications of the baleful effects of carbonic acid in the school atmosphere—the pale faces and impaired health of the children, and the chronic headaches and nervous depression of the teachers. The subject is of vital importance to the public, and any authoritative information which may be forthcoming ought not to be capriciously suppressed. —N. Y. Tribune.

A Japanese Waterfall.

Arima has a great name for its mineral springs, says the Japan letter to the Pall Mall Gazette. At the baths the water came hot out of the earth. We drank of them twice daily for a week when at the "hermitage." But they are so strongly impregnated with iron and soda that they disagreed with us. We resorted to stratagem to get rid of them without offending our doctor, who believed the hot springs were fountains of "jouvence,"—an opinion shared by the natives. Near the house was a delightful waterfall. Dick, following the example of some English missionaries, adopted the plan of taking an early shower-bath in its spray. He was delighted with the change, and used to come home refreshed and exhilarated. One fine morning, however, as he was enjoying the spray, a viper shot by his foot, and he thought for a moment wanted to dart at it. He jumped away, and when he turned around to pelt the reptile it was half in a hole, so that he only wounded it. This incident spoiled his pleasure. A place that harbored such ugly tenants was no longer charming.

The Japanese look with artists' eyes at their most dreadful serpents. The realism with which they model, paint and enamel them in decorative mohair is quite startling. One evening I was made miserable by a serpent shooting itself out of a hollow bamboo rod. It was artificial; but I did not know this until it was told me. Nobody could on the evidence of the eye alone have detected the unreality.

Cure for Dyspepsia.

A gentleman who is in business in this city has cured himself of a chronic and ugly form of dyspepsia in a very simple way. He was given up to die, but he finally abandoned alike the doctors and the drugs and resorted to a method of treatment which most persons would laugh at as "an old woman's remedy." It was simply the swallowing of a teaspoonful of hot water before breakfast every morning. He took the water from the cook's tea-kettle, and so hot that he could only take it by the spoonful. For about three weeks this morning dose was repeated, the dyspepsia all the while decreasing. At the end of that time he could eat, he says, any breakfast or dinner that any well person could eat, had gained in weight, and has ever since been hearty and well. His weight now is thirty or forty pounds greater than during the dyspepsia suffering, and for several years he has had no trouble with his stomach,—unless it was some temporary inconvenience due to a late supper or dining out, and in such a case a single trial of his ante-breakfast remedy was sure to set all things right. He obtained this idea from a German doctor, and in turn recommended it to others, and in every case according to this gentleman's account, a cure was effected.—Hartford Courant.

Unconsciousness in Death.

"A dying man may be burned with a red-hot iron and not feel pain. Dr. Crawford said to a reporter of the Mail, of Stockton, California. "Consciousness may remain to the dying almost to the dissolution, but generally they lose the power of thought long before actual death. In cases of death in which there seems to be suffering, the writhing and spasms are due to reflex muscular action. Fear weakens the nervous system, and, consequently hastens death; and the reverse of fear may prolong life." The doctor cited a medical report concerning a Methodist minister. He lay on the verge of death, cold and pulseless, and friends around his bed sang his favorite hymn. As they ceased, and while the physicians stood timing the death, the minister's hands moved, and he whispered "Glory!" Restoratives were administered, and an hour later the man had recovered. He lived many years after that. He said he understood every word spoken at his bedside. Under the nervous excitement and enthusiasm wrought by the hymn, he had exerted his muscular strength, and lived.

Memorial Meeting.

The Wendell Phillips Memorial meeting held in the Meionaon, Boston, in connection with the suffrage sociable, on Thursday evening of last week, was the most appropriate and consistent meeting of this kind that has been, or will be, held. There were present a good number of the old associates and co-workers with Phillips and Garrison, who have reached nearly fourscore years of age. Among them we saw Samuel E. Sewell and wife, Elizur Wright, and Theodore D. Weld, who were of the large number of students that left Lane Seminary nearly fifty years ago, because they were prohibited by the faculty from having any discussion on the slavery question, at a time when Dr. Lyman Beecher was president of the institution. It was worth a visit to Boston that stormy night to see these aged reformers, and hear them speak. But the most touching and tender tribute to the memory of Mr. Phillips was from William Lloyd Garrison, Jr., who probably realizes more than any other person now living, the deep friendship and substantial aid his father received from Mr. Phillips in the dark and stormy days of opposition to the anti-slavery cause.

One of the speakers expressed surprise at the general tribute paid to the memory of Phillips by all parties, reaching even to some Southern papers. But the time has been, and now is, when the Southerners have more respect for the memory of the old consistent Abolitionists like Garrison and Phillips, than they have for the old politicians who encouraged the slave-holders up to the time of the Rebellion, and then deserted them. Among the number were at least two have been governors of Massachusetts.

A Word to the People.

What are you living for? Just to satisfy your own selfishness, or are you striving to please the God that gave you life, and all the blessings that you enjoy? This is a very important question for each one to consider. My friends, God did not create man and give him such noble faculties for mere curiosity. No, but he placed him here to do his part toward saving the children of earth from falling into the pit. Now, have we done our duty? No! I answer. Many are crushing their brothers and sisters deeper into the pit. I may rouse some when I say no good principled man will set temptations before his weaker brothers and cause them to fall, dragging down with them their wives, children and friends to sorrow and woe. Many preach the judgment day as being far off, but I preach it near at hand, now upon you. Liquor dealers, will you stop now? Where you have made unhappy homes—you may again make happy ones. Will you hear the voice of God to-day, and obey?

A FRIEND.

Her Lessons in Cooking.

"Bread?" exclaimed a Vassar College girl. "Bread? Well, I should say I can make bread. We studied that in our first year. You see the yeast ferments, and the gas thus formed permeates everywhere and transforms the plastic material into a clearly obvious atomic structure and then—"

"But what is the plastic material you speak of?"

"Oh! that is commonly called the sponge."

"But how do you make the sponge?"

"Why you don't make it; the cook attends to that. Then we test the sponge with the thermometer and hydronometer and a lot of other instruments, the names of which I don't remember, and then hand it back to the cook, and I don't know what she does with it then, but when it comes on the table it is just splendid.—Chicago Saturday Herald.

Estimating Wealth.

"Ma, you know those Newcomers across the way that we have all been afraid to call on because their furniture arrived at night, and we couldn't tell whether it was nice or not?"

"Yes, and they always keep the curtains so near closed that not a soul has been able to get a glimpse of their rooms."

"None of the neighbors have called on them yet, have they?"

"No."

"Well, we better go over, because if we keep on snubbing them they may turn around and snub us."

"But why do you think so?"

"Their servant girl was in Cash & Co.'s tea store this morning. She bought a pound of tea, and when the clerk handed her a glorious chromo, she turned up her nose at it."

A Chance to Make Money.

Mr. Dumley was making an evening call, and Bobby, who was allowed to sit up a little later than usual, put to him the following question:

"Mr. Dumley, do you want to make $5 in ten minutes?"

"Do I want to make $5 in ten minutes?" laughed the young man. "Certainly I do. But how can I make $5 in ten minutes, Bobby?"

"Mamma will give it to you. She told papa that she would give $5 to see you hold your tongue for ten minutes."

A New York stone-cutter received the following epitaph from a German to be cut upon the tombstone of his wife. "Mine vife Susan is dead. If she had lived till next Friday, she'd been dead shust two veeks. 'As a tree fall so must it stand.'"

Don't Worry about Yourself.

To retain or recover health, persons should be relieved from anxiety concerning disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person seasick in anticipation of a voyage, before reaching a vessel. We have known people to die of cancer in the stomach, or any other mortal disease. A blind-folded man, slightly pricked in the arm, has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore, persons, to remain well, should be cheerful and happy; and sick persons should have their minds diverted as much as possible. It is by their faith that they die. As a man thinketh, so is he. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of disease; and, if he has little or no attachment to life, he will slip away as easily as a child will fall asleep. Men live by their minds as well as by their bodies. Their bodies have no life of themselves; they are only receptacles of life, tenements for their minds, and the will has much to do in continuing the physical occupancy or giving it up.

Mania for Buttons.

A few months ago, Mr. J. H. Tingue of Seymour, became known in every Connecticut household by an offer of $50 to any young lady who would, within thirty days, gather and forward him a string of buttons containing not less than 2,500 different patterns. This offer has cost Mr. Tingue about four thousand dollars thus far, and he has placed on exhibition at the Capitol four cases, each containing four strings. The exhibition is a very curious one. There are buttons of every possible shape and design, and some of the collections, especially of the oxidized metal buttons, are beautiful. It is estimated that there is a total of 300,000 buttons, and about 75,000 different kinds. Most of the strings contain 2,700 each, and two of them 3,500 each.

The original offer came about in a singular way. Mr. Tingue, who was exhibiting at the Meriden Fair mohair plush goods, which he manufactures, saw a string of 1,430 buttons collected by a six-year-old child. Visiting in Portchester, N. Y., shortly after, he spoke of this to two young ladies. In reply to their claim that they could exceed the 1,430, he said he would pay their fares to Seymour and give them $25 if they did, and $50 if they secured 2,500 within thirty days. On the twenty-ninth day they came with a string of 2,700, and received their fares and $50.

Some Leap Year Facts.

February had five Fridays this year. This will not occur again for 40 years, or until 1924, but in the next two centuries it will come once in 28 years. The explanation is that February has five Fridays once in 28 years so long as every fourth year is a leap year; but the centennial years are not leap years unless exactly divisible by 400, and when such a year comes in a 28-year period, the interval is 40 years. Thus, 1900 is not exactly divisible by 400, and the next period will be one of forty years. After that we have 28-year periods for 200 years because the year 2000 is divisible by 400, the next 40-year skip being from 2092 to 2132.

The five Fridays in February recur in regular order during 400 years, as follows: 1884, 1924, 1952, 1980, 2008, 2036, 2064, 2132, 2160, 2188, 2228, 2256, 2284. Here the '84 comes in again and the rule repeats itself. The same rule applies to any day in the week. Thus, in 1880 February had five Sundays, which will occur again in 1920, 1948, 1976 and so on. Housekeepers whose washing day is Monday will be glad to know that that day will occur five times in February only once more in this century (1892) and not again till 1932.—Newton Graphic.

An Old Bank.

The centenary of the Bank of Ireland has recently been reached, but it has occupied its present illustrious quarters in College Green, Dublin, only since 1808. Its foundation stone, as the parliament house of Ireland, was laid in February, 1729. It is said to have been designed by an Italian named Castelli, but Sir Lovet Pearce, the Irish surveyor-general of the day, appears in the official document as director of the building, and he was voted $10,000. It was not fully completed until 1739, but the Irish parliament sat there a few years before. Its last meeting therein was held in 1800. It was first intended to attach the building to Trinity College, but finally the government sold it to the Bank of Ireland for $200,000, subject to a ground rent of $12 a year, and in 1804, under the viceroyalty of the Earl of Hardwicke, the altering of the interior for business purposes was begun. A beautiful model of the bank stands before the entrance of what was once the house of lords.

The Golden Moments.

One day, when the snow was melting and pools of water were numerous, a little boy was seen in a street dipping water with a tin cup into a paper bag, and looking up with a bewildered expression when he saw that it ran out as fast as he could pour it in. Doubtless he was doing it just as well as any one could, but it was not a success and could not be. And yet we think of a great many boys and girls who are spending their lives in much the same way. Not by pouring water through paper bags, of course, but by letting golden moments and gems of opportunities slip through the meshes of idleness and carelessness. Dear young friends, are you dipping water into a paper bag?

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 8, 1884.

March Meeting.

The annual town meeting in Quincy, held on Monday last, passed off very quietly. Nearly seventeen hundred voters went to the polls and cast their votes, but there was no one drunk or noisy, nor any disturbance. Since the liquor saloons were closed peace and quiet reign. Nearly all who held an office last year were re-elected. Mrs. Claflin, who was nominated for one of the School Committee, at the Republican caucus, was elected by a very handsome vote. The vote on the sale of intoxicating liquors was about the same as last year—over two to one against granting licenses. The polls were open at 7.30 A. M., and kept open until 4 P. M., and in about one hour after, the result was announced by the Moderator. The ballots were received by the Selectmen and counted nearly as fast as deposited by the Moderator, Clerk and three assistants, namely: H. A. Keith, Edwin W. Marsh, and Sigourney Butler. For full particulars see report in another column.

The "Jessie James" Gang.

Many of our citizens have within a few days read or heard reports of larceny and mischief done by a gang of small boys who reside in Quincy, from eleven to sixteen years of age. The facts of the reports are these:

About Christmas time the Coddington schoolhouse was entered and a lot of paper, pens and pencils were taken. Three weeks ago yesterday it was entered again, ransacked pretty closely, and many dozens of pencils, several gross of steel pens, besides a large quantity of writing paper and other things were carried off. The next day, Saturday, the Adams Academy was entered, and a lot of skates, keys, gloves, stationery, two rulers, etc., were taken. On the Monday following the boat house of Mr. Benjamin F. Bass, at Black's creek, was entered; some things were carried away, and many others broken or injured. Mr. Bass estimates his loss at fifty dollars.

They next entered the private schoolhouse on Greenleaf street, and their helped themselves to the things usually found in schoolhouses.

Complaints were made to Officer Furnald, who began to investigate the matter. Having gained some clew, by learning that a certain boy was seen with a dark lantern, he commenced tracing out the guilty party. He found that eight boys, some of them quite young, had formed themselves into a gang, and had their headquarters in a stable, in the rear of the Robertson House. Three of them had ribbons with the letters "J. J." pinned to them; and they called themselves the "Jessie James Gang." Part of their booty was found under Souther's old plaining mill, near the coal wharf and railroad; part under E. E. Hall's barn, and some on their persons.

The names of the lads have been given to the Superintendent of the Schools, and what action will be taken is not known as yet. As the parents of these young rogues are very respectable, they may not be brought before the court for trial, for these reasons we are requested to withhold the names for the present.

It is a sad affair for the parents, that their boys should be found guilty of such wicked deeds. Still it is fortunate for the boys that their mischief has been found out, as other evil deeds might soon have sent them to jail, if not to the gallows. We learn that one of the boys had already secured a pistol, and that plans had been laid for breaking into the High schoolhouse, and also a fruit store, on Granite street, near the post office. If their career had not been thus timely checked, there is little doubt but some deeds more terrible than these petty larcenies would soon have happened.

The Boston Journal, in alluding to these young desperadoes, says:

"The discovery of a band of juvenile burglars at Quincy, organized under the aspiring name of the 'Jessie James gang,' and devoting themselves to acts of lawlessness and plunder, taken in connection with the recent disarming of a small Philadelphia school boy by his teacher, and the apprehension of another small boy on his way to the Western prairies with an outfit comprising a copy of Peck's Bad Boy and a revolver, is something which may profitably serve as food for thought for parents and educators. To what is the American small boy tending? What is the meaning of all this epidemic of crime among youths of such a tender age? Probably the question cannot be answered off hand, or by a single explanation. But there are certain obvious truths which are less regarded than they ought to be. For one thing there is an innate love of adventure in the composition of most boys which, if rightly directed, may be led to the study of history, biography and travels, and may be satisfied by the healthful enjoyment of the exciting and unusual in actual human experience. But ignored and left to itself, or suffered to feed on debasing mental pabulum, this love of adventure, which in itself is natural enough, and which may help to the formation of a vigorous and courageous manhood, accepts wrong ideals, and craves gratification in lawlessness and crime. Sensational reports of crime and criminals in the newspapers strengthen this tendency. Books like Peck's Bad Boy are distinctly pernicious, because they scoff at everything that is good, and make a hero out of a boy who in his mildest freaks was a public nuisance, and at its worst a public calamity.

"But the chief cause of this deplorable tendency, is bad books and bad papers. "Dime novels" are often spoken of in this connection, but the dime novel as it first came into existence is a standard and a classic by comparison with the boys' story papers and five-cent 'libraries' which are poured out upon our youth by the million copies. Let the reader possess himself of a few specimens of these papers and he will cease to wonder that boys are educated in criminal tastes by them. The moral for parents is to be sure that they know, not only what their boys are doing and with whom they are, but what they are reading and what are the standards and ideals of life thus set before them."

JOHN WILSON HOUSE. At the recent annual meeting of the Weymouth Historical Society, the Library Committee stated, among the donations were 27 bound volumes, 65 pamphlets, 3 framed pictures, etc. One of the pictures was an engraving from a painting by Miss Quincy, of the ancient dwelling house of Rev. John Wilson, one of the earliest ministers of Quincy. This house stood on what is now known as the Taylor farm, near the present residence of Mr. Edmund F. Taylor, on Hancock street. The sketch was taken in 1846, and the house was removed a few years later.

Grand Master Cochran and the other officers of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts are expected on the first train in the afternoon, and they will institute the new lodge at two o'clock. It is expected there will be a large number of visitors from lodges in neighboring towns.

The headquarters of Mt. Wollaston Lodge will be in the hall of the new building recently erected by George F. Wilson. This hall will be leased by the lodge, who have furnished it very tastefully and conveniently for the purposes for which it will be desired. The hall is forty-five feet by twenty-eight, with two good-sized anti-rooms. A rich tapestry carpet has been laid. The officers' chairs are nicely upholstered in the appropriate colors. The walls and ceiling have been beautifully frescoed; while the handsome gas fixtures, canopies, venetian blinds, etc., make the hall look attractive and elegant.

The new lodge will start off very satisfactorily; there are twenty-three charter members, and over one hundred applications for membership; among them several of Quincy's most prosperous business men. With such a showing how can Odd Fellowship be anything but a success in this town.

SURPRISE. A party of friends from Brockton surprised, on Monday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Winslow, of Quincy, at their residence, on Edwards street. They came in a four-horse sleigh, arriving about seven o'clock, and passed a pleasant and enjoyable evening with the host and hostess, who were taken by storm, but were equal to the emergency. A supper was served, and about twelve o'clock the surprisers started homeward.

SPRING IS NEAR. The time is rapidly drawing near when the preparing of the ground for the sowing of seed etc., for flower and vegetable gardens, and good manure and fertilizers will be sought for. Mr. Charles N. Hunt of Atlantic, agent for the Common-sense fertilizer, invites the attention of our readers to a trial of this fertilizer which he says gives the best of satisfaction and compares favorably with the higher priced fertilizers. Mr. Hunt can furnish it in any quantity desired and will cheerfully give any information concerning it. Send to him for testimonials and prices.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The union temperance meeting, held in the Congregational Church on Sunday evening last, was well attended, Mr. John Federhen, 3d, presiding. After a few opening remarks by the chairman, plainly stating the object of the meeting, viz.: to urge upon all the wisdom of polling a large "no license" vote at the Monday election, the speakers of the evening, Rev. D. M. Wilson and Mr. Charles A. Foster were introduced. The addresses of both these gentlemen were listened to with close attention, each showing the wisdom of a continuance of the course so successfully carried out in the past two years. Many facts were cited which had come under their observation, which were proofs of a decided change for the better, since "no license" has been the rule in our town. A large choir of young people sang several temperance songs with good effect.

On Sunday evening Rev. J. L. Harris, pastor, will deliver a sermon on "Character," especially prepared for young people, though doubtless interesting to all.

At the morning service, on Sunday, the ordinance of baptism will be administered to several, and a number be received into the Church.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a fair in the vestry of the Congregational Church on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. A large number of useful and fancy articles will be for sale at moderate prices. A supper and some entertainment will be furnished each evening. Gentlemen especially should be early at the post office, which is a special feature of the fair, to receive any tender missives which the young ladies may have dared to send, it being leap year.

PERSONAL.

Master Joseph L. Whiton, Jr., entertained a few of his friends on Friday evening of last week, it being the event of his eleventh birthday.

Miss Annie B. Sampson spent Sunday at home, returning to Norwood on Monday.

Mrs. Sarah Kingman has returned home from Holliston, where she has been spending the winter.

Mrs. Pauline Collins left Boston on Wednesday for Oakland, California, having enjoyed a visit of some nine months in the East; much of the time being spent in our midst.

Mr. Chas. N. Harris has been offered the past week the position of organist at Christ Church, Quincy, but probably will not accept.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Vulture Engine Company, held on Monday evening, after the transaction of all business, a fine collation was served the members, the same being a gift from Mr. Walton Hall, who thus honored his birthday.

The usual sociable and supper was held at the Baptist Chapel on Thursday evening. A large number was present, and, after feasting on the good things so bountifully provided, listened to a most excellent address by the new president, Mrs. Hiram W. Phillips, after which they were agreeably entertained by readings by Misses Ada Driscoll and Flora Marks; solos by Miss Louise Carter and M. A. Marks; and an organ solo by Mrs. Phillips. It is the intention to make these entertainments a recreation for old and young.

THIS AND THAT.

The result of the election on Monday was highly gratifying to nearly all in this part of the town, especially the large majority of votes cast in favor of no license. This will be one more clean year added to the records of the town; and as long as the temperance people are willing to exert themselves for the good of others as they have so grandly done in the past three years, there will be little danger of the rum element ruling.

Many were also much pleased at the election of Mrs. Claflin to a place on the school committee.

Mr. Seth Sears, principal of the Washington School, allowed the grammar grades to vote on the license question which resulted 12 in favor and 32 against licenses.

The young people of the place went on a sleighride Wednesday evening, and although the snow came merrily down it did not dampen the spirits of the party in the least. The Cushing House, Hingham, was visited, where supper was served and two or three hours pleasantly spent before returning home. The time was so thoroughly enjoyed that all are now longing for a sled ride, and as Old Prob has prophesied a heavy snow fall we hope to have our longings satisfied.

On Thursday evening the married people took a ride covering the same ground as the party on the previous evening. They say that Mr. Cushing used them better than he did the young crowd, but we hardly believe it—Say, how about the sleigh? E. M. F.

Milton's Election.

The annual town meeting in Milton was held on Monday. J. M. Churchill was chosen Moderator, and the following is the result of the election:

Town Clerk, Henry B. Martin.

Town Treasurer, Charles Breck.

Selectmen, J. Walter Bradlee, J. H. Burt, and Albert A. Brackett.

Tax Collector, Simeon Emerson.

School Committee, Rev. Frederick Frothingham (three years), and Henry B. Martin (one year).

Road Commissioners, O. W. Peabody (three years), and A. L. Hollingsworth (two years).

Trustees of the Public Library, Rev. A. K. Teele, A. L. Hollingsworth and Rev. Frederick Frothingham.

Auditors, Patrick McDermott, and H. B. Martin.

Trustees of the Cemetery, Samuel A. Burt.

Constables, Samuel W. Alden, Maurice Pierce, Samuel C. Hebard, Geo. A. Harned, Henry P. Caswell, Stephen Walsh, William Cunningham, James E. Bronsdon, Benjamin F. Sloan, Jacob L. Lincoln, John H. Severance, Charles Mitchell, Albert K. Hunt, James O. Davenport, and James Wigley.

The license vote was: No, 178; yes, 51.

Among the newly elected officers we see the name of Mr. Charles Breck, who is still retained as treasurer; an office which he has faithfully and honorably filled for many years. As one of the town fathers is the name of Albert A. Brackett, son of Charles C. Brackett of Quincy. Mr. Brackett is a prosperous leather dealer on South street, Boston, and we rejoice to see him in his new role, and believe he will prove a trustworthy servant of the town.

Wollaston Items.

The K. of H. boys held their annual reception at Wollaston Hall, on Friday and Saturday evenings of last week, and presented to their patrons a very interesting programme in the shape of a minstrel entertainment. Large audiences were present on both evenings, to greet the W. W. W.'s, as the rising of the curtain brought to view the "merry-makers" on their way to a "huckleberry" picnic, who, in a pleasing way invited all to join in the frolic, and so we had the opportunity of seeing "Evilina" gather "Sweet Violets" "Early in de Morn," "Gabriel blew de horn" at the "Capetown Races" even if "Razors were flying through the air," while we were in search of a "Pilot" to take us through the "Magnolias of Old Tennessee." The laughable farce of "Freedom of the Press" brought the entertainment to a close, and it needless to say, that all were pleased with the evening's sport.

Rev. B. B. Sherman has accepted the call tendered him by the Congregational Society to become its settled pastor.

In a previous article, mention was made of the need in this section, of a "Village Improvement Society" if for no other purpose than to encourage the setting out of trees along our streets, and we were pleased to see in your last issue, a few lines on the subject from one of your former correspondents. In this connection, the beautiful letter of Oliver Wendell Holmes, sent to the superintendent of schools at Cincinnati, and which was read at the Arbor day celebration last year, is worthy the attention of all and this time we wish to quote a few lines, as we believe that more interest should be taken on this subject by the residents in this section:

The trees may outlive the memory of more than one of those in whose honor they were planted. But if it is something to make two blades of grass grow where only one was growing, it is much more to have been the occasion of the planting of an oak which shall defy twenty scores of winters, or of an elm which shall canopy with its green cloud of foliage half as many generations of mortal immortalities. I have written many verses but the best poems I have produced are the trees I planted on the hillside which overlooked the broad meadows, scolloped and rounded at their edges by loops of the sinuous Housatonic. Nature finds rhymes for them in the recurring measures of the seasons. Winter strips them of their ornaments and gives them, as it were, in prose translation, and summer reclothes them in all the splendid phrases of their leafy language.

What are these maples and beeches and birches but odes and idyls and madrigals? What are these pines and firs and spruces but holy hymns, too solemn for the many-hued raiment of their gay deciduous neighbors.

On Monday evening Wollaston Hall was taken possession of by the roller skaters, and it is intimated that the hall is to be opened every evening for the purpose of a skating rink.

Misses Helen D. Bright and Ida P. Carpenter, together with the Boston University Male Quartette, gave a very fine entertainment consisting of readings and songs, at the Methodist church, on Wednesday evening last.

NEWPORT.

Weymouth Items.

Edgar Rogers, an inmate of the almshouse, tired of life, committed suicide on Tuesday by taking Paris green. He leaves a widow, who lives at South Abington, from whom he has been separated for a number of years. He made an attempt to hang himself while on a visit to his wife's family on Friday of last week.

In common with many others, the members of G. A. R. Post No. 58, of Weymouth feel quite indignant and fully endorse the resolutions recently adopted by our brother comrades of Paul Revere Post No. 88, of Quincy.

The Board of Selectmen has organized with Thomas H. Humphrey as chairman and Henry O. Nash, clerk.

"Bolting" in Braintree will be "no go" this year, J. M. Knights is elected.

A small vote for Weymouth, as only 922 out of nearly 2,700 votes were polled Monday. Caucuses were held in the different wards on the previous Tuesday evening, and candidates nominated, who were almost unanimously elected on Monday, consequently the old board of town officers is now having its second term. After hearing reports of committees chosen at the last annual meeting, it was voted to take up the 22d article in the warrant which relates to taking water from Great Pond for the use of the town, and after three or four hours of lively debate it was voted by a very large majority; also that the town raise by bonding the sum of $300,000, and appropriate the same to the purpose of supplying the town and its inhabitants with pure water. The town appropriated $300 for a proper observance of Memorial Day. The license vote was: yes, 38; no, 448; after which the meeting adjourned for one week, when the remaining articles in the warrant were acted upon.

The committee have secured the services of Mr. Lewis E. Tilden as organist at the first Universalist Church, for one year, commencing April 1st. Morning service at 10.30; evening service at 7 o'clock. As usual he will preside at the organ in the Baptist Church at 2 30 P. M. F. H. T.

MASONIC. On Thursday evening Rural Lodge held its regular meeting in the beautiful headquarters in Robertson block. The Master Masons' degree was exemplified on three candidates in a satisfactory manner. There was a very large attendance of the brothers from the neighboring lodges, there being at least seventy-five, representing thirty or more lodges, and these, together with a full attendance of the members, tested the lodge room to its utmost, and was probably the largest meeting of Rural Lodge. Following the meeting a bountiful and elaborate supper was served in the banquet hall by Boston's well-known caterer, Seiler, and it is almost needless to say that full justice was done to the inner man before departing for home. Rural Lodge is in a prosperous condition, and has considerable work before it this winter, there being several candidates waiting for degrees.

☞ The causes of the increasing frequency and violence of floods in American rivers, and the measures that ought to be taken for protection against them, will be discussed by Dr. Oswald in the April number of the North American Review.

☞ The movement for a statue of the late Wendell Phillips in Boston, has been abandoned, Mrs. Phillips not approving of the project.

The Trial of the Hydrants.

EDITOR PATRIOT: At the request of yourself and several other citizens we herewith give you a statement concerning the condition of our works at the time of the trial given the hydrants on Feb. 22d. Some ten days previous to this time we notified the Town's Committee that we had thirty-seven hydrants ready for service, and upon notice we would turn over wrenches to the proper parties and give them all needed instructions for their use.

Late in the evening of February 21st we received verbal information that the town would like to try the hydrants on the following day. It was then understood that the trial should occur in the afternoon. Early in the fornoon it was decided by the engineers that they would have the trial then, and with only an hour's notice the water was turned on. At the time of deciding that the trial was to be made in the forenoon, we had but twenty-seven feet of water in the stand-pipe on Payne's Hill. We were pumping into it, expecting to have it full for a trial in the afternoon. We continued pumping during the trial, in order to maintain the head we then had, and did, in fact, slightly increase it. The average pressure at the Town Hall during the trial being eighty-six pounds, as shown by the chart on our self-recording pressure gauge. With a full stand-pipe this pressure would have been increased ten pounds, or so, and a much better exhibition would have resulted.

If it had been desired, or if it should ever happen that we have no water in the stand-pipe, we can pump directly into our main pipes, with the stand-pipe disconnected, and increase the water pressure to 150 pounds or more, and supply twelve to fifteen large fire streams under that pressure at once. With the result of this trial I presume you are familiar. With three lines of hose, each 200 feet long, and nozzles varying from 7-8 inch to 1 1-4 inches in diameter, two streams were thrown to one-half the heighth of the columns of the belfry of the Unitarian Church, and at the same time a third stream was thrown ever the Coddington schoolhouse.

Again four streams with 250 feet of hose each were played from one hydrant at the corner of Hancock and Granite streets; one of these streams was led to the low ground in the rear of the Robertson House, and from there threw a stream entirely over the chimneys on the building. Each of the other three streams would have done the same.

After a few other similar trials in the Square, two streams were thrown from the hydrants on Union street, one at the corner of Edwards street, and the other at the corner of Washington street, and in the estimation of those who saw them they were equal to those played in the Square. Under the circumstances the trial was considered very satisfactory.

Respectfully,
QUINCY WATER COMPANY.

The Columbus Verdict.

The investigation into the cause of the accident to the City of Columbus, has been finished, and the inspectors who have patiently listened to the testimony, and weighed carefully the evidence without prejudice, have fixed the responsibility of the disaster upon Captain Wright, who neglected to have a man on duty to watch the course of the steamer. The inspectors find that he was the legal pilot on board, and that he was not at his post of duty at the time, but delegated this responsibility to a person not authorized to perform the duty of a pilot. For this inattention to his duties, Captain Wright's license as master and pilot is revoked.

As a master Captain Wright has an honorable record, and in his conduct there was no trace of heartlessness or indifference to the safety of his passengers, and it is more in sorrow than in anger that the penalty is put upon him and approved of as a righteous judgment, in the hope that it may prove a warning to others to avoid making similar mistakes. Attention was called by the inspectors to the heroic efforts of the captain to save his passengers and mitigate the horrors of the disaster.

WOLLASTON. A missionary meeting will be held at the M. E. Church, Wollaston, Sunday evening, Mar. 9th, at 7.30 o'clock. Addresses by Rev. Haralamby Dimitroff, from Sistov, Bulgaria; also Rev. Yujiro Motora, from Tokio, Japan, is expected to be present. The addresses will be illustrated by maps and Eastern relics. Lecture free. A voluntary offering will be gratefully received.

A new skating rink has been opened at Wollaston this week. On Monday evening Prof. Bailey and Miss Sylvester of Boston gave fine exhibitions, delighting all present. The hall is very nice, and being close to the depot makes it very convenient for all who wish to go by the cars. Popular skaters from Boston and other places are expected nearly every evening, whose skill on rollers is marvelous and very amusing.

Letter from New York City.

NEW YORK, March 5, 1884.

Barnum and Jumbo are again here, and have taken up their old quarters in the Madison Square Garden, where Mr. Barnum will exhibit his "greatest show on earth" for some time, to admiring crowds of small boys and children generally. Jumbo, the pet of the little ones, has grown five inches taller, and weighs nearly a ton more than he did last year.

The equestrian statue of General Simon Bolivar, of which mention was made several months ago, is now finished and ready for placing upon the granite pedestal in Central Park. The statue is designed for presentation to this city by the Venezuelan government, and will cost about twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. D. L. Moody says that he cannot get along in his work without Brooklyn's popular preacher, Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, so Mr. Pentecost has made arrangements to join the evangelist in London shortly. He preached his farewell sermon last Sunday evening, and expects to be absent four or five months. President Robinson, of Brown University, will supply his place the rest of this month.

The New York Prison Association held two very interesting meetings on Tuesday, the 26th ult. One in the afternoon at Grace Hall; the other in evening at Steinway Hall. These meetings were for the purpose of calling together the ministers of the various denominations of this State, to thoroughly interest them in the great work of the Association. Many prominent speakers addressed both meetings, and it is hoped great good will result. A new feature in the treatment of prisoners on Blackwell's Island is the establishment of a school for reading, writing and spelling, the sessions of which will be held for four hours twice a week. It was begun last Tuesday with forty boys, between fifteen and eighteen years old.

There are many cases of scarlet fever in New York, at this season of the year. The disease is not confined to the tenement houses, but has found its way into the homes of the upper classes, in spite of strong precautions against it.

It is rather unusual to find the membership of one church numbering over three thousands souls, but Mr. Talmage's Tabernacle church was last Sunday swelled to 3,107 by the addition of 139 new members, many of them on confession of faith. W. L. M.

District Court, Quincy.

There was not a case before the Court on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday,—a very unusual event, but a happy one to record. On Friday John F. Sheehan, of Braintree, was sent to the House of Correction for ninety days, for an assault on Norah Sheehan; and Edward Maurice of West Quincy, for breaking glass at Thomas Haverhan's, was fined $5 and costs, and for non-payment was committed to the House of Correction.

A WISE MAN.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?
All through the Spring,
When Tonics seemed the proper thing,
To cure the ills those seasons bring?
MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?
When bilious headache seemed the style,
And torpid liver clogged with bile
Caused fifty frowns to every smile?
MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?
When dull and languid in the morn,
With putrid breath and face forlorn,
His taste departed and ambition gone?
MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?
When prickly humor took a start,
And more he'd fret, the more 'twould smart,
As poisoned blood had played its part?
MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

Spring is the time to use a blood purifier. MORSE'S YELLOW DOCK acts directly on the blood, the liver and digestive organs, and cures and rebuilds when other remedies fail. None is genuine unless the notice, "Prepared by MORSE YELLOW DOCK ROOT SYRUP CO." appears upon each wrapper. Sold by druggists. $1.00 per bottle; six bottles for $5.

Free Text Books.

There is much to be said in favor of the proposed measure to have free text-books in our public schools. At present the school system of Massachusetts makes everything free save this. Why, it may pertinently be asked, should the line be drawn on books?

With the parents of many of our children, this item is the turning point of continuance in school or taking the children out and putting them in the store or workshop. It is just at the time, too, when a year or two more of schooling would make a better citizen of the boy, and be of equal advantage to the girl. These school books are an item of considerable magnitude to the man of humble circumstances, with a large family, but who desires his children to have all the advantages which our schools afford.

The free text book system would put all the scholars upon an equality. Many of them are now unable to buy their school books. They feel the invidious distinction which is made by their more fortunate companions, the children of well to do parents,—and the distinction is more keenly felt by them at that age than by the parents themselves. The free text book would remove all this.

Massachusetts has always been liberal in the support of her schools. Nothing that has been needed to place them in the front rank has been withheld by her citizens. The project now under consideration is worthy of thought.—Peabody Press.

Obituary.

Captain Phineas H. Glover, of this town, who died Feb. 28th, at the age of seventy-six, was what might truly be called a good man, and a person of some note. He was born in Dorchester, and came of good stock. His grandfather, Dr. Phineas Holden, of Dorchester, was a surgeon in the revolutionary army, at the battle of Bunker Hill, and for many years the principal or only physician of that ancient town. At the early age of fourteen Captain Glover left school and entered the shop of J. & B. Leeds, on Washington street, near the Boston & Albany crossing, at that time the only dry goods store between Roxbury line and Boylston Market. In 1828 he engaged with Mr. George I. Galvin, a well-known lumber dealer on Otis wharf, Fort Hill, and had charge of Barry's wharf, Essex street, then at the foot of Lincoln street. Captain G. was a member of the choir of old Trinity, Summer street, under the leadership of Mr. James Sharp, and while thus connected, sung from Dr. Lowell Mason's score the favorite melody, "Watchman, tell us of the night."

In 1829 he went to Calais, Me., on business for Mr. Galvin, intending to stop a few weeks only, but remained there forty-two years, and for forty years had charge of the choir of the Unitarian Church of that place. He possessed a rich bass voice of great power and compass, which held out wonderfully to the close of life. He was an honest man, as was shown by his course after the panic of 1837, in which year, in common with thousands of others, he failed in business, his creditors allowed him to go on, and no advantage was taken of the bankrupt law, for he paid eventually every dollar with interest, and his credit consequently with the merchants of Boston, of whom he bought goods, was of the highest.

He came to Quincy some five or six years ago, and has been known among us as a quiet, genial man, an excellent neighbor and a good citizen. He attended regularly the Unitarian Church till rendered unable by his growing infirmities. The funeral services over his remains were held last Saturday afternoon. They were conducted by his pastor, the Rev. D. M. Wilson, and a hymn was sung, especially arranged by the deceased to a favorite tune for this occasion. He leaves a widow and one son.

Death of an Estimable Citizen.

After many weary weeks of patient suffering, borne without a murmur, at his residence, No. 45 Jay street, Mr. Otis Churchill quietly passed away at noon yesterday. Mr. Churchill was born in Bolton, Province of Quebec, Canada, May 28, 1810. He came to this city in 1836, and established himself in business, in which he was actively engaged until a few months ago, when he was stricken with the complaint which terminated his life. When he first came to this city he united with the First Presbyterian Church and maintained his connection therewith until the State Street Presbyterian Church was organized, when he joined that society and has been an active and consistent member ever since. Mr. Churchill was quiet and unostentatious in public, but his true worth was exhibited in private life—in the home circle—which he loved so well. His quiet ways and bright example will long be remembered. A man of unswerving integrity and strict probity he impressed all with whom he came in contact and was looked to by many for counsel and advice in trying times. "Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord." Mr. Churchill leaves a widow, one daughter, Mrs. W. B. Shonts, and a brother, Mr. Amos Churchill, of Quincy, Mass.—Albany Argus.

INSANE. The officials at Dedham jail, where Burnham Wardwell, the almshouse and prison crank, is serving a year's sentence for libelling Sheriff Sprague of Worcester, seems to think he is insane. He is now at work in the laundry connected with the institution.

FURNITURE. Some idea can be had of the immense furniture business now carried on in Boston by visiting Paine's manufactory on Canal street.

☞ Dog-racing is becoming a popular sport in Philadelphia. The distance is from 100 to 500 yards; the dogs evince great interest in the competition, and speculation is lively in the betting ring.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 5th, 1884.

The important doings of the week at the Capitol embrace in the Senate, first the passage of the McPherson currency bill, and next a step to improve the worn out navy. After three days of interesting debate there was a vote favoring the construction of seven steel cruisers, but the question whether they should be built in the Government navy yards, or by private contract was left open for further information. A move to grant $100,000, for the relief of the recent tornado sufferers in the Southern states was considered, but adversely reported from committee on the ground that the suffering was not of that transcendant character that placed the victims beyond the pale of adequate local aid. The Senate also passed the House bill to repeal the iron-clad oath with the limitation of an amendment to retain the oath as a test of loyalty during the war for persons who present claims.

The House of Represenatives spent the greater part of the week on the bill for extirpating diseases among cattle and prohibiting the transportation of those infected over State lines. The Republicans, aided by a few Democrats finally carried the measure, and the sum of $250,000 was appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act. According to appointment Thursday's session was mainly devoted to honoring the memory of the late Representative Haskell, of Kansas. Congressmen Tucker, Keifer, McKinley, Pettibone, Rice, Browne, Belford, Burnes, and the colleagues of the deceased member, Messrs. Ryan, Hanback, and Perkins took part. Apparent sincerity and warmth of admiration marked the pronouncement of these tributes and poetic quotations were a feature of each eulogy. The House passed seventeen pension bills and discussed at length, but without result, a bill authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasanton as a Major General. It was advocated by Messrs. Bayne Maginniss, and Rosecrans, and opposed by Messrs. Steele, Stockstager, and McMillan, who contended it would be establishing a dangerous precedent to retire a man who had voluntarily resigned from the Army, and gone into private life.

The House elections committee are actively engaged in hearing contested cases, daily sessions being held, within ten days they expect to have five or six cases ready to report and hope to clear the whole contested election case calender by the end of the present month. The committee complains of the difficulty of getting the contesting parties before it, the sitting members almost invariable pleading for postponements, when the day fixed for his case arrives.

The President has been examining the first report of the Civil Service commission, which he has transmitted to Congress with his message congratulating that body and the people upon the good results that law has already accomplished, and avowing conviction that it will yet prove of more signal benefit to the public service. He commends the suggestions of the Commissioners for further legislation, and advises such an appropriation as shall be adequate for their needs. The Commissioners do not think that any change in the Civil Service act is now needed for fairly testing the new system.

The Danville investigation has run aground for lack of funds, and will have to be suspended until Chairman Randall reports back a special appropriation for it from his committee. A call for money was made nearly a month ago but it has met with no response. Mr. Randall is now betenoir of the whiskey men, who expect to get their bill before the House, and passed Tuesday. They are quaking for fear he will come in with an appropriation bill which will of course take precedence of the whiskey bill, and postpone it indefinitely.

Though this is the season of prayer and pennance for penitents, and there has been appreciable respite since the crowding entertainments of Shrove Tuesday, sack cloth and ashes are not universally worn. There has been no lack during the week of receptions, lunch parties, "at homes" and musicales. The President will give another Congressional dinner Wednesday evening to which he has invited fifty Senators and Representatives, who are not accompanied here by their wives, or are not encumbered by such helpmeets. The President desires to extend the hospitality to every Senator and Representative once during the winter, but since the House has so greatly increased in its number of members it has become quite a formidable body to entertain. Madame Nilsson was an invited guest at the White House Thursday, a musicale and reception being given her by the President, during which she sang "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River." ADAMS.

THE SILVER KING. March 17th the theatre-goers of Boston and New England will have opportunity to pass judgment on the new original drama by Messrs. Jones and Herman, which has achieved the most pronounced success on the English stage, and been received with the greatest possible favor in those cities of the United States where it has been presented. Manager Eugene Tompkins secured all the proprietary rights in the drama for New England, and has held it in reserve for the spring offering. For months the work of preparation has been progressing under his immediate supervision, as he aims to have it rival "The Exiles," "Michael Strogoff," "The World," "Youth," "Jalma," and other grand productions which have scored highest success at this house, and there is every confidence that THE SILVER KING will equal if not surpass them all.

The "Silver King" is conceded to be the best English melodrama that has been given stage realization, and this is from the fact that the authors have produced work superior to that which has preceded it. The story has strong interest, is coherent and replete with thrilling incidents, the characters are of the present day and are well drawn, and the situations skilfully wrought. Every opportunity for scenic and stage effect is taken advantage of, and the character will be well sustained.

☞ The Braintree Cadets held their third annual exhibition drill and ball at the Braintree Town Hall last evening. They appeared for the first time in their new uniforms. There was a competitive drill, and two handsome gold and silver medals were awarded to the successful contestants. After the drill, dancing and a bountiful supper were enjoyed. A large barge was run during the evening from this town.

WOODS HOLL, Mar. 5.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

Two weeks ago I wrote you something about our operations in saving cargo from the wrecked "Columbus." We were then at work in the lower between-decks. After we had become familiar with our surroundings we made very satisfactory progress. We sent up a large quantity of shoes, and a lot of general cargo from that quarter. We become more interested as our work advanced, for there is a certain facination about working under water. We broke out the lower hatchway which was choked with boxes of bacon, and when once set free they went spinning to the surface, and were there caught and hoisted to the deck of the lighter. When we had made our way clear, we crawled in under the floating cases and pushed them along, one by one, to the hatchway. We had got thoroughly warmed to our work and were sending up the cases faster than they could be cared for, when there was a signal to come up. We answered back by giving three pulls on the life line and up we went. "Come, boys," says Capt. Davis, "we must get away from here; the wind is breezing and we shall soon have rough water." We did not like the idea of being pulled away from our work so suddenly. We plead that there were six or eight cases of bacon already broken out and near the hatchway, and we would not be over twenty minutes in getting them; and besides there was a case of glass-ware on the third deck, which we intended to have secured. "Not another minute," says the captain, and so we were forced to give it up.

We were soon on our way back to Woods Holl, and were glad that we did not remain longer.

The two following days, Friday and Saturday of last week, the wind blew a gale so we did not get to the wreck. Sunday we went out but there was not so much as a bubble to mark the spot where the stranded ship lay. The masts were gone and the bow had disappeared, and as a strong breeze prevailed we made no attempt ta find the wreck. Monday we were out again. The sea having become smoother, we discovered the position of the sunken ship by the whirling, eddying current over her. After the lighter had been got into position, Mr. Duncan and I again descended to the ship; cautiously we looked about us as we went down, for we knew not what would be the new order of things. When our feet struck, we found the deck much cleaner than when we were there before. The sides of the ship which had towered above us on either hand, like two iron walls, and which had served to break the force of the current, were broken off at a line with the second deck, and all the debris which had laid piled there, had been swept off and lay scattered upon the sands below.

We lowered ourselves to the bottom outside the ship, there lay the stern, and as we climbed over it we could see the gilt work and read the ship's name thereon. We picked up a number of pieces of battered silver-plated ware, some knives and forks, a set of false teeth, a piece of a gold watch-chain, and a silver watch. We found the ship's wheel, and we saw one of the ship's boats; it had been split open and lay bottom up. We made our way to the deck again and went down to the hatchway, and followed along under the deck, through great fissures in the ship's sides, we could see daylight, and the undertow sucked in and then returned, with every succeeding wave. The greater portion of the cargo which we had left, was now washed out or stove to pieces. We sent up whatever we could find that seemed worth saving; among the articles there were about forty dozen axes; there were also several scattered about, dozens of them, the cases having been knocked to pieces. A few of these stray ones we brought up; and one man, after carefully selecting a good one, wiped the rust from it; and we could not but admire his thoughtfulness, when he tenderly laid it away, remarking as he did so, "that it would be very handy for his wife to use." After such an exhibition who will say that George Packard is not a good husband.

We made an examination of the ship's bow, which we found completely collapsed. We then concluded that it would not be worth the effort to attempt to save anything more.

Yours respectfully,
H. W. PHILLIPS.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."

159 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

A Happy Life.

How happy is he born and taught,
That serveth not another's will,
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill!

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepared for death,
Untied unto the worldly care
Of public fame or private breath;

Who envies none that chance doth raise,
Or vice; who never understood
How deepest wounds are given by praise;
Nor rules of state, but rules of good;

Who hath his life from rumors freed,
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors great;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of His grace than gifts to lend;
And entertain the harmless day
With a religious book or friend;

This man is freed from servile bonds
Of hope to rise or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all.

Farm and Garden.

Save the Liquid Manure.

According to the experiments of the best German chemists, the liquid manure from the horse amounts to one and a half tons per year, which contains nitrogen and potash worth $12 75. The cow furnishes four tons, containing $14.00 worth of the same element. These figures show the importance of saving all the liquid manure possible, even if only one-half the whole quantity be voided at the stables. If two horses and ten cows are kept, the liquid manure they would make, provided they could all be saved, would be worth $165 50, or enough to buy about four tons of good phosphate. If but one-half of it is voided in the barn, and the half of that is wasted for the lack of absorbents, or washed away by rains, it would require a ton of phosphate to replace the loss.

If it will pay to build a silo for a herd of ten cows, will it not pay to build a cistern to hold the liquid manure of the same number of animals? If dry earth or peat be used as absorbents, it would require at least its own weight in the absorbent. Would it not be easier to pump out and spread forty tons of liquid than to draw in forty tons of dry earth and draw out eighty tons thus saturated with moisture? These are practical questions for the consideration of the farmers, and worthy of their study.

If such a cistern were built, would it not pay to allow soapsuds and all waste water from the house to run into it, thus saving whatever of fertilizing value may be in them, and at the same time disposing of a material which is too often a nuisance about the house, and which, in a few years, may so saturate the ground near where the sink pipes discharge as to drain back into the well and pollute the water supply of the house? Such a dilution of the liquid from the stables would only better fit it for application to the soil.—Cultivator.

EARLY CHICKENS. Those who desire early chicks should set the eggs this month; but to have chicks come out the first of April and do well, it is necessary to have a good, warm house and an open shed that is in a sheltered place open to the South, where in pleasant weather the chicks may sun themselves and get the fresh air. To shut small chicks up in a tight house is but to invite disease and early death; therefore, those who have not a good place for the chicks to air themselves in, had better wait two months before setting any eggs.

THE HOT BED. Everyone needs a hot bed to start early vegetables, but it is not everyone that can properly care for one; for unless constantly watched, the young plants may be entirely killed by over heating. The sashes need to be lifted as soon as the air gets hot enough, and if the best thing is to be done it needs to be raised twice; first, just enough so that the morning sun will keep the plants warm enough, and when the sun gets well up raise considerable higher, or, if a pleasant day, to open entirely. In our changeable climate it is often necessary to drop the sash in the middle of the day, to keep the proper temperature, so the farmer who works most of the time away from home cannot tend a hot bed as it should be unless he has some one at home that he can rely on to assist him in changeable weather. A hot bed well cared for is a great convenience as well as a luxury.—Ploughman.

Anecdotes.

"Do you pretend to have as good judgment as I have?" exclaimed an enraged wife to her husband.

"Well, no," he replied, slowly; "our choice of partners for life shows that my judgment is not to be compared with yours."

A young man in a train was making fun of a lady's hat to an elderly gentleman in the seat with him. "Yes," said his seat-mate, "that's my wife, and I told her if she wore that bonnet some fool would make fun of it."

A little girl, aged nine, called her father to her bedside the other evening. "Papa," said the little diplomat, "I want to ask your advice."

"Well, my dear, what is it about?"

"What do you think it is best to give me on my birthday?"

"Why don't you get up as early as you used to a few days ago?" angrily asked a wife of her lazy husband.

"Because, my dear, it's sleep year," he grinned, as he turned over for another snooze.

An Oswego physician, in questioning an old colored woman the other day in regard to her ailments, asked if she had a good appetite.

"No, doctor," she replied; and I don't care about a good appetite until provisions get cheaper, especially meat."

"What a methodical fellow you are, Brown!" said Filkins, who had stepped into Brown's office during the latter's absence.

"Why, what do you mean?" asked Brown, who had just entered.

"Mean," echoed Filkins; "to think that you should lock all your drawers up when you are only going out for five minutes. 'Tisn't likely that any one would meddle with your papers."

"Of course not," replied Brown, "but how did you find that the drawers were locked?"

Household Receipts.

WEDDING CAKE. One pound of flour, one pound of brown sugar, one and one-eighth of a pound of butter, one-half pound of candied citron, four pounds of currants, four pounds of raisins, (stoned and chopped), nine eggs, one table-spoonful each of ground cloves, cinnamon, mace, nutmeg, and three gills of peach syrup. Fruit should be rolled in flour before mixing. Bake in a moderate oven. Keep in a cool place.

To make corn bread, take two cups of Indian meal, one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonsful of baking powder, one cup of molasses, one quart of sweet milk, two eggs; stir with wheat flour about as stiff as for cake and bake in a deep dish.

Lemon cookies are made of one large cup of sugar, a little more than half a cup of butter, half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in two teaspoonsful of water; flavor with lemon, and use just flour enough so that you can roll the cookies out thin; bake in a quick oven.

For ham and eggs on toast, chop fine cold boiled or baked ham. Toast and butter slices of stale bread; crush the crust with a napkin to soften it. Spread with the ham and set in oven for three or four minutes. Beat six eggs with a half cupful of milk, a little pepper and salt. Put this in a saucepan and stir over the fire until it begins to thicken. Take off, beat well for a moment, spread over the ham on toast; serve hot immediately.

If baby is hoarse at night, take a small piece of oil silk, rub a little lard or animal oil of any kind over it and fasten it next his skin, over the chest. It may be pinned with small safety pins to his wrapper.

Sponges which are to be used in the bath-room may be softened by boiling for a few minutes in three waters. After each time of boiling rinse it in cold water, and put on the stove again in a pan of cold water.

Fashion Notes.

The mutton-leg sleeve appears on some of the new dresses.

New street suits are made of woolen stuff of two colors.

Boys wear the Russian blouse until they are six or eight years of age.

Black crepe-lisse trims the neck and sleeves of many of the newest black silk dresses.

Artificial flowers are not at all fashionable for corsage boquets.

The sleeves of no dress are considered finished or stylish unless it has either a bit of ruche or a ruffle of lace around the wrist. Oriental lace is very popular for these ruffles, but is not durable.

Puffed shoulders are seen on all dresses.

Undressed kid gloves, in the mousquetaire and Suede shape, are still the most fashionable.

This and That.

☞ A cure by the laying on of hands is reported in this town. A lad's mother cured him of going to the cake basket and capturing all the frosting. It was all effected at one sitting.

☞ The finest geranium bush we ever saw had an old decaying fish planted at its roots.

An undertaker loves his "bier,"
A doctor loves his "all;"
Shoemakers love their "cobblers" dear,
And "port" the sailors hail.

☞ The baker is a kneady man, and this arises from the fact that he is greatly inclined to loaf.

☞ A drunken man is seldom injured by a fall, and he probably isn't by a spring—if the water is good.

☞ No girl ought to think of marriage until she can wash and iron. She can't get along unless she knows how to smooth her husband's bosom when it becomes ruffled.

☞ "I fill the Bill," said Willie when he got into his mother's preserve closet. "And I foot the Bill," remarked papa, overhearing the soliloquy.

☞ "It is necessary to understand the management of the breath," says a writer, "in order to be successful as a singer." It is also necessary to be successful as a husband.

☞ The fashion of wearing stuffed birds on ladies' hats is progressing so rapidly that by next Fall, Thanksgiving turkeys will be in demand.

☞ "Yes," said the merchant, "I always mark the most expensive of my goods as 'sold' during the holiday season. Then when women read the signs it makes them crazy to have the same article, and they are so disappointed that I finally promise to try and get them another—which of course I have no trouble in doing. Oh, it's a great scheme I tell you, and never fails."

Conundrums.

Why is a "girl of the period" like a careful housewife? She makes her waist (waste) as little as she can.

Why are lovers like apples? They are often paired.

When is charity like a top? When it begins to hum (at home).

Why does a pie-man shed scalding tears? Because he cries all hot.

When is a lamp-lighter like a cowardly soldier? When he runs away from his post.

Why is a dandy like a dog? He has more collar than shirt.

Dr. V. M. Dow, of New Haven, Ct., a Graduate of the Academic, Medical and Scientific Departments of Yale College, an able analytical Chemist, having made a thorough analysis of Lewis' "Red Jacket Bitters," reports as follows:

NEW HAVEN, June 8, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Having examined the formula and subjected it to a careful analysis, the preparation known as "Red Jacket Bitters," I hereby certify to the fact that it contains no mineral or poisonous substances, and is composed of excellent material.

Miscellany.

Who Owns it Now?

A Yankee coachman was driving some Englishmen about Boston recently, and, at last, brought them to the monument of Bunker Hill. "Ah, yes," said one of the explorers, "I believe this is the place where we Englishmen gave you Yankees a sound thrashing, isn't it?" The driver scratched his head and then quietly replied: "Mister, can you tell me who owns this parcel of ground at the present time?"

Artificial Oysters.

Artificial oysters are the latest things in deceptions, and numbers of "manufactured bivalves" are said to be passed off on the Paris public. Hitherto, although the oyster itself could be well imitated, it had been found impossible to make the substance adhere to the shell like nature, but an ingenious personage has invented a glue which overcomes all such difficulty. The exact composition of the imitation is not stated, but copper is a prominent ingredient.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION. Dyspepsia may be produced by eating too much; by taking cold water with the food; by making the stomach do what the teeth ought to do; by general debility arising from laziness, breathing impure air and taking into the stomach alcoholic liquors; by undue exposure to heat and cold. If these little every-day items were properly attended to, dyspepsia would be among the things that once were.

A QUEEN'S OBSEQUIES. An old woman named Robinson, well known as the Queen of Costermongers all over London was buried there the other day. She had been for years a vender of cat's meat, and made a fortune in small usury. By direction of her will, her remains were borne by four men wearing white smocks, followed by twenty-four young women wearing violet dresses, Paisley shawls, hats with white feathers, and white aprons. The corpse was shrouded in white satin, with a handsome wreath round the head. Free drinks and pipes were served at public houses named. There was an immense attendance, including numbers of pony carts and donkey harrows crowded with costermongers.—Exchange.

☞ Points of law with no precedent for decision are of common occurrence, but a somewhat ridiculous one has come up (out West of course) which involves a legal construction of rules of orthography. A Chicago couple recently took out a license and got married under the names of Draheir Nworb and Aileda Xoeiiw. The bridegroom, who swore to the genuineness of the names when he obtained the license, is to be prosecuted for false swearing, but he claims that no law prescribes that English names must be written from left to right instead of from right to left, and if he chooses to write his name "t'other end to" he is simply exercising his rights as an American freeman.

☞ A Polish woman applied to the town clerk of Chicopee, a few days ago, for a "three-years' marriage license," remarking, in explanation, that she already had a husband in the old country but as he wasn't coming over for three years she needed a little temporary consolation, and thought that a marriage good for the meantime would be the proper thing. Unfortunately for her however, the town clerk was not marrying on the instalment plan that day.

☞ The Hyde Park town report shows that the expenditures last year aggregated $77,868.54; unexpended balance from appropriations, $1,126.94. The indebtedness of the town is $180,000; amount in sinking fund, $83,395.54. The real estate is valued at $4,294,950; personal, $560,452; total increase, $257,631; rate, $16 per thousand.

☞ In a trial before a colored jury in Texas, the jury was told by the judge to retire and "find a verdict." They went to the jury room, and after some delay returned into court, when the foreman rose and said: "Massa judge, we have looked everywhar—in the drawers and behind the door—an' can't find no verdict. It warn't in the room."

☞ At a recent sale of old coins a silver dollar of 1794 brought $59; a silver dollar of 1794, bronze proof, $130; a quarter dollar, date 1827, of which not more than five or six original impressions are known, brought $218.

☞ Eli Perkins and Josh Billings have each had $5000 left them by a deceased millionaire in Michigan, who was a great lover of fun. The mother of Artemas Ward also gets $5000.

☞ All the gas went out on the eve of a dinner party on Fifth avenue, N. Y., the other evening, said to be due to the cold, but really owing to the disinclination of the company to supply any more gas gratuitously. Fortunately, there were candles in the house.

☞ A little boy fell out of bed. He gave as his reason; "I slept too near where I got in." Being in doubt as to the right explanation of it, he corrected himself by saying; "No, that wasn't the reason; it was because I slept too near where I fell out."

☞ A story is told, which sounds much like a lie, that water is so scarce at one locality near Middleboro that a man had to take his bath in a dish of cider. The thing may have happened, if it was an inside wash.

"This pail I bought of you last week," said a customer to Deacon Gilpin, "leaked like sin the first time I put water into it."

"You ain't been putting water in that pail, have you?"

"Why, yes."

"That's what's the matter. If you'd kept flour in that pail you wouldn't had any trouble."

How it happened—A—"I say your top coat is covered with dirt."

B—"It fell into the gutter as I was coming home from the club last night."

A—"Why didn't you keep better hold of it?"

B—Because I had it on at the time."

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

Our Prayer.

Father, as here we kneel,
Grant that each soul may feel
Thy presence near.
To those by care oppressed,
With thou impart thy rest,
Make them forever blest,
No more to fear.

And Father, those who are Still from Thee wandering far
In sin's dark way,
May they Thy mercy see,
From all their sinning flee,
And bring their hearts to Thee;
For this we pray.

Help us each day we live,
Just praise to Thee to give
For blessings given;
Until our journey o'er,
We reach that other shore,
And dwell forevermore
With Thee in heaven.

ALDEN H. DAY.

Miscellany.

CHANGED THEIR MINDS.

The members of the firm of Ross & Ross, West India goods, were in no way related, as one might suppose from the similarity of names.

They were, in fact, born many miles apart, and although they both saw the light first on the fifteenth day of December, 1843, one opened his eyes in Bangor, Maine, and the other in San Francisco, Cal.

By a strange coincidence both boys were christened plain John. Since the organization of the firm they had, to prevent confusion, added a middle letter to their names, which was meaningless except for purposes of identification.

The Maine John divided his name with the letter M, and the California Ross wrote his name John C.

When these two boys were fifteen years of age they met for the first time in the reception parlor of a popular Middle-States' institution of learning, and this chance acquaintance ripened into a warm and devoted friendship, which had lasted down to the present time.

They graduated at the same time, entered the same store as clerks, and five years before the opening of this story, began business for themselves.

The Messrs. Ross were often taken for twin brothers. They were both dark, both had brown, curly hair, weighed the same number of pounds, and were of the same height.

One measure at the tailor's, the shirt maker's and the boot maker's answered for both.

They had very nearly, similar tastes, and on one point at least were in perfect accord—they both hated women.

The Messrs. Ross lived together in a very fine house up town, where they entertained their friends and business acquaintances.

No woman had ever entered this bachelor establishment, and all their servants were of the sterner sex.

There were seven clerks, busy writing invoices and bills of lading all day long in the office of Ross & Ross, down town.

The chief among these was Abel Strothers, a man past middle life, sedate, methodical, and rather proud of his neat handwriting.

Abel Strothers was a widower, with twin daughters, to whom he was devotedly attached, and on whom he lavished unbounded love, outside of business hours.

As the subject of women was tabooed in the office of Ross & Ross, and as their will was Abel's law, he never spoke of his twin daughters to the firm; and the first they knew of the existence of the girls, who were named Lily and Rose, was when Abel Strothers died.

It was the custom of the chief clerk to enter the office promptly at nine o'clock, and he had never been absent a day since the organization of the firm.

When therefore on this particular morning he did not appear at the usual hour, the firm, who entered the office promptly at a quarter after nine, awaited in some impatience until the half-hour the arrival of the clerk, and then dispatched the Milesian porter, Patrick, to his residence, to learn the cause of his absence.

The porter returned with the information that Abel Strothers had been taken suddenly ill, that morning, just as he was leaving for the office—had been obliged to take to his bed—and that the doctor who had been hastily summoned to attend him pronounced his illness heart trouble of long standing, from which it was doubtful whether he would recover.

On receipt of this intelligence, the firm proceeded at once in a hired cab to the house of the chief clerk, and a slatternly servant girl, with very red eyes, and a very dirty face, ushered them into the room where lay the sick man.

He had suffered considerable pain when first attacked, but was now resting easy; and his employers being seated, one on each side of the bed, proffered their sympathy, and Abel Strothers made suitable replies, in a very weak voice.

He was sinking rapidly, and died before noon.

Before he closed his eyes in that final sleep, he made an ordinary and not unusual request of the Messrs. Ross.

The doctor, who was standing at the head of the bed with his hand on the dying man's pulse, said to him:

"Mr. Strothers, you cannot live very long, and if you have any business which you wish attended to during your lifetime, it had best be done at once."

Abel Strothers was lying with closed eyes, breathing very heavily; but at these words of the doctor's he opened them, and turned his face first to John M. Ross, who was on the left side of the bed, and then to John C., who was on the opposite side.

"Ross and Ross," he said, and gave a hand to each, "I have served you faithfully, and you have just heard what the doctor says. I have a trust which I wish you two faithfully to perform after I am dead.

"We will perform it faithfully," said the firm in one breath.

"I leave," continued the dying man, "a snug little property, and a will. My instructions for your administration of the trust are contained in the will. My business is all in good order, and my lawyers have charge of all my papers. They will place them in your hands after my burial."

The doctor, who was Abel Strother's family practitioner, now leaned over the bed, and whispered something in his patient's ear.

The dying clerk shook his head.

"No!" he said. "It will be time enough for that after I am dead. Poor girls!"

And then he closed his eyes. He never spoke again, and in fifteen minutes later was a dead man.

He was buried the next day, and the firm and his fellow-clerks out of respect to his memory, attended the funeral.

The office was closed, and from the door knob hung crape, over which was posted a notice of the clerk's demise.

The chief mourners were two young girls, whose faces were hidden by heavy veils, and who shed tears very profusely, but very quietly, during the entire ceremony.

They did not particularly attract the attention of Messrs. Ross & Ross at that time; but two days afterward, when the lawyers placed the papers of the deceased clerk in their hands, and they read Abel Strothers' last will and testament, they recalled the veiled figures with something akin to hatred of them in their misbegotten breasts.

The trust which they had faithfully promised their late clerk to perform was, in brief, this:

The Messrs. Ross were appointed executors of his estate, and guardians of his twin orphan daughters, Lily and Rose.

In a long document, attached to the will, and marked A, the dead clerk gave minute instructions as to the manner in which the latter trust was to be carried out.

The girls were now seventeen years of age, and until they attained majority they were to reside in the house of the Messrs. Ross subject to the latters' constant care and watchful guidance.

John C. Ross read the will, and when he finally reached its close, his partner jumped to his feet with an ejaculation of astonishment.

"A most extraordinary request, John M.!" he cried.

"Most extraordinary!" echoed John C.

"Preposterous!" cried John M.

"Absurd!" chimed John C.

"Impossible!" cried both in the same breath.

And then they stared very hard at each other in silence for at least five minutes.

John M. spoke first.

"John C.," he said, "this request of our late clerk, who certainly served us faithfully, amazes me; but we accepted the trust when he was on his death-bed, and we must faithfully perform it at any cost."

"Yes, John M.," agreed the California Ross, we promised, and Ross & Ross never break their promises."

This acknowledgment settled the matter, and two weeks after the conversation detailed above, Lily and Rose Strothers took up their residence at the Ross mansion, and the firm quietly accepted their self imposed martyrdom.

The girls were very quiet young ladies, and gave their guardians but little trouble. They were well bred and intelligent, had refined tastes, and the Messrs. Ross treated them very kindly.

Two years passed away, and one December night John M. Ross was seated before the library fire, in dressing gown and slippers, with a very deep frown corrugating his not bad-looking face.

"I'll do it!" he cried at last, jumping to his feet and walking up and down the floor; "I'll make a full confession. He'll think I'm a fool, of course, but I'll consider myself a greater fool if I do not follow the dictates of my heart."

Just as he finished speaking, the library door opened, and in walked John C.

At sight of his partner, the California Ross suddenly halted, his face flushed guiltily and he dropped his eyes.

"He knows it all," thought John M. "and has come to upbraid me. What shall I say? How shall I begin?"

He coughed nervously, took a step towards his partner, and the latter raised his head.

"John M.," he said, "I have something to say to you—something very important."

"Yes, yes," stammered John M., apologetically, "I meant to speak to you myself."

"It's a strange move; said the other.

"Yes, it is strange; but I have been blind all these years, and have just awakened to a full knowledge of my heart's desire."

"You?" cried John C.

And he took a step forward.

"Yes," answered John M. And he dropped his eyes. "I'm certain that I cannot be happy without Rose Strothers as my wife."

"And I am equally certain," cried John C., "that I cannot be happy without her sister Lily as my wife! I just came in to tell you about it."

"And I was just going to confess to you my love for Rose," explained John M.

And he rushed to the door and called, "Rose! Lily!" at the top of his voice.

The girls came hurriedly down from an upper apartment, and John M. caught Rose around the waist and drew her into the library. John C. followed him, leading Lily, and the four assumed very lover-like attitudes.

"We are both guilty, John C.," cried John M.

"Yes, both," agreed the other.

And they shook hands.

The sisters embraced and kissed each other, and taken altogether, it was a very happy little quartette.

Early in the spring there was a double marriage at the Ross mansion, and the happy grooms acknowledged to each other that a misogynist was, in their opinion, a fool, and a misogamist little better than a brute.

Gabriel's Trumpet.

Some years ago in Georgia a band known as Ascensionists were having a grand revival. One day when the meeting was in full force a storm came up, and a young gentleman who was out hunting with his servant took refuge in the church door. Being curious to see the service, the two hunters crept up into the gallery, and there hid in a place where they could observe without being observed.

"Come, Lord, come, our robes are ready. Come, Lord, come," cried the preacher, while all present gave a loud "Amen."

"Marsa Gabe," whispered Cuffy, lifting his hunting horn to his mouth, "let me gib dem jist one toot."

"Put that horn down or I'll break your head," replied the master, in a whisper.

The horn dropped by Cuffy's side, and again the minister cried: "Come, Lord, come, we are all ready for Thy coming. Come, Lord, come."

"Do, Marsa Gabe—do jist lemme gib 'em jest one little toot," pleaded Cuffy, wetting his lips and raising the horn.

"If you don't drop that horn, Cuffy, I'll whip you within an inch of your life," whispered the exasperated master.

"Blow, Gabriel, blow, we are ready for his coming. Blow, Gabriel, blow, pleaded the minister.

Cuffy could no longer resist the temptation, and sent a wild peal ringing from end to end of the church; but long before it's last echo died away his master and himself were the only occupants of the building.—Harper's Drawer.

The Wrong Customer.

Hackmen who charge extortionate prices sometimes make a mistake in their passengers, as was the case at an early hour on Saturday morning last. Mayor Martin, of Boston, after attending a party at Odd Fellows' Hall, took a carriage to his house on Commonwealth avenue, and much to his surprise, the hack-driver charged him two dollars. The Mayor knew that at that hour the price was one dollar for a single passenger, but paid the man his two dollars, and after taking his number requested him to come to the Mayor's office at noon on Saturday.

"Who shall I inquire for?" said the hack-man.

The answer was: "The Mayor."

At about nine o'clock next morning the hack-man was at the City Hall, and when he succeeded in obtaining an audience with the Mayor at half-past eleven, he made the most profuse apology, and paid him back one dollar.

The Mayor gave the hack-man a lecture which he will not probably forget, and told him he should report the case to Lieut. Warren, the Superintendent of Hacks and Trucks, in order that some other person under like circumstances should not be swindled.—Boston Journal.

"Azoturia."

A new horse disease known as azoturia has appeared among the horses of Brockton, and quite a number have died from the disease. The disease attacks very suddenly, and the animal at once loses the power of motion in the hind legs. While traveling, the horse suddenly breaks out into a violent sweat, and limps along on the two hind legs, with the points of the hoofs barely touching the earth. The physicians say if the animal is immediately after the symptons manifest themselves, taken into a shed and swung, by means of supports around its body, there is a probability of saving its life. The pain is intense, and as a general thing the animal dies. The cause of the disease savors of a spinal trouble, but authorities agree that it is a disease of the blood. As a general thing it attacks horses which are well fed and cared for. No cause for the disease has yet been definitely found, but it is thought to be produced by the animal standing in the cold and getting chilled. It is more prevalent in the winter season than at any time in the year.

City of Churches.

Oakland, California, is the City of Churches on the Pacific coast. With a population of 40,000 there are 40 churches. The church-going population is estimated at 30,000 and three-fourths of the strongest business men are regular attendants at church. There is a church building for every one hundred and sixty homes, and a clergyman for every two hundred voters in the city. The records show that Oakland is the most moral city on the Pacific coast. The church has had a great influence on the culture, morals and society of the city, and the people can well afford to support liberally everything connected with the churches.

Foreign Ministers' Dress.

Carp writes in Cleveland Leader: "The origin of this idea of clothes making the foreign minister dates back to Ben Franklin, who appeared in citizens' dress at the courts of Europe about the time of the formation of our government. Later ministers, however, did not follow his example, and in 1817 American ministers wore a 'blue coat, lined with white silk, straight, standing cape, embroidered with gold, single breasted, straight or round button hole, slightly embroidered; buttons plain, or, if they can be had, with the artillerist's eagle stamped upon them, i. e., an eagle flying with a wreath in its mouth, grasping lightning in one of its talons; cuffs embroidered in the manner of the cape; white cassimere breeches, gold knee-buckles, white silk stockings, and gold or gilt shoe-buckles and three-cornered chapeau, not so large as those used by the French, nor so small as those of the English. A black cockade, to which an eagle has been attached, sword, etc., corresponding."

"Picture, if you can, how our ministers then looked; I can't.

"So the custom continued until, I think, the days of Andrew Jackson, who prescribed the following change in the interest of cheapness:

"American ministers at foreign courts shall wear a black coat with a gold star in each side of the collar, near its termination, the underclothes to be black or white, at the option of the wearer. A three-cornered chapeau de bras, with a black cockade and gold eagle, and a steel ornamented sword with a white scabbard.'"

Sunflowers Facing the Sun.

While the fact that sunflowers turn their faces toward the sun in its course during the day is as old as our knowledge of the plant, I am not aware that any record has been made as to the time of night that they turn to the East again after their obeisance to the setting sun. One evening during a short stay at a village in Colorado, in the summer of 1881, I took a walk along the banks of a large irrigating ditch just as the sun was setting. The wild variety of Helianthus annuus, Lin., grew abundantly there, and I observed that the broad faces of all the flowers were, as is usual in the clear sunset, turned to the West. Returning by the same path less than an hour afterward, and immediately after the daylight was gone, I found, to my surprise, that much the greater part of those flowers had already turned their faces full to the East, in anticipation, as it were, of the sun's rising. They had in that short time retraced the semicircle in the traversing of which with the sun they had spent the whole day. Both the day and night were cloudless, and apparently no unusual condition existed that might have exceptionally affected the movements of the flowers. I doubt not that many persons, like myself, have supposed that sunflowers remain all night with their faces to the West, as they are when the sunset leaves them, and until they are constrained by the light of the rising sun to turn to the East again. It is not my purpose to offer any explanation of the cause of the phenomenon here recorded, but it seem to me improbable that it could have been an exceptional instance; and I only regret that no opportunity has since occurred to me to repeat the observation.—C. A. White in Nature.

United States Postoffices.

There are about 50,000 postoffices in the United States. Two thousand two hundred of these are so considerable as to be filled by the appointment of the President; the others are filled by the appointment of the Postmaster-General. The salaries of these 50,000 postmasters vary greatly. Postmaster Pearson, of New York City, who is a son-in-law of ex-Postmaster General James, gets $8,000 a year. No other postmaster gets as large a salary. All the "non-presidential" postmasters are paid upon the basis of the business done at their offices. This is determined, not by counting the stamps nor by counting the number of pieces handled, but by counting the number of stamps canceled. Forty-seven postmasters receive $1 a year as salary; eleven receive twenty-five cents a year; one receives nine cents; one six cents, and one five cents a year. Postmaster Sloane, of Perilla, White County, Tennessee, is the five-cent man. He enjoys the distinction of receiving the smallest salary paid to any of Uncle Sam's civil servants. There is some difference, says a correspondent, between Mr. Arthur's $50,000 and Mr. Sloane's five cents. In all, we pay the postmasters of the country about $10,000,000 a year—$3,750,000 goes to the "presidential" postmasters.

Greenback Poisoning.

The girls who count the greenbacks, new and old, in the Treasury Department, suffer a great deal from arsenical poisoning. From 9 to 4 o'clock every day, with a slight intermission, they are handling treasury notes. Of course they wet their fingers, in order to help them over the sticky money. This process soon brings out the arsenic in the green dye, and by 2 o'clock the sponges in the finger cups, which are fresh and yellow in the morning, are of a muddy green color. Every time a counter puts her green finger to her face she runs the risk of blood poisoning. Many of them have suffered from it again and again. The least abrasion of the skin on the hand or the face gives the poison entrance to the system. Once in it is hard to drive out again.

Chas. T. Derry & Co.

We copy from the Scientific Times the following notice of the above-named firm. As the members are natives of Quincy, and lived for many years in this town, we believe it will be read with interest by many:

The above mentioned firm are engaged in a business that is in most respects different in its methods and details from almost any other, and it is therefore possessed of no small degree of interest. The construction of wharves and all marine architecture involves an immense amount of labor and capital, and requires a degree of experience such as is necessary in few other pursuits. Messrs. Derry & Co. are among the best known contractors in New England, and are engaged in every species of work termed sea wall and wharf building. They make especially of removing and rebuilding old sea walls, and their facilities for this class of work are unsurpassed. They own a number of lighters for transportation of stone and other materials, which they also utilize in carrying all varieties of freight and heavy merchandise to all parts of Boston harbor. They have every kind of a mechanical device that the exigencies of their peculiar trade have brought into existence, and employ the best class of labor that can be procured.

This firm rebuilt Long Wharf, Boston, at a cost of $250,000, the job occupying eight months. This operation was considered impracticable by the best engineers, owing to the limited space available to prosecute operations and the fact that the old wall had to be connected to the new. They took up the old walls, which were twenty-two feet under water at low tide, and rebuilt the end of the wharf for a distance of 140 feet. One hundred and fifty feet of this wharf had been previously rebuilt at a cost of $200,000, the work occupying two years. Making allowances for the great improvements in the methods employed in these operations during the last twenty years it is safe to say that Messrs. Derry & Co. saved the owners at least seventy thousand dollars, and performed the most difficult piece of sea wall building ever done in Boston and vicinity. Other work done by them worthy of mention was the building of a sea wall on the Beacon street extension, for the Boston and Roxbury Mill Corporation, 2,500 feet long, 12 feet wide at the base, 4 feet wide at the top, and averaging 16 feet in height. Besides the pursuits mentioned above they are also large dealers in granite bridge abutments and similar materials.

This firm has been established thirty-five years, and the gentlemen concerned, Mr. C. T. Derry and Mr. James Burr, have been so long engaged in this trade as to possess a thorough and extended knowledge of all its details and requirements, and are, perhaps, as well posted on the subjects it involves as any men in this section of the country. The office of the firm is located at No. 26 Hawley street, Boston.

Singular Circumstance.

In the year 1740 one of the directors of the Bank of England, a man of unimpeachable honor, lost a bank-note for £50,000 under peculiar circumstances. It seems that he had bought an estate for that sum of money, and for convenience sake obtained a note for that amount. As he was about to put it under lock and key after he reached home, he was called out of the room, whereupon, as he thought, he placed it upon the mantel. Upon returning a few minutes later, the note had disappeared. It could not have been stolen for no one had entered the room, whereupon he concluded that it had been blown into the fire and had been consumed. He laid the matter before the officers of the bank, and they reissued a note for the same amount, he giving bonds to re-imburse the bank if the note should ever be presented for payment. Thirty years after, when he had long been dead and his estate distributed among his heirs, the supposed non-existent note turned up at the bank counter for payment. As the bank could not afford to dishonor the obligation, the money was paid out and the heirs of the dead man were asked to make good the loss; this they refused to do, nor could the bank employ any legal machinery to force them to do so. The person who profited by the matter was supposed to be a builder, employed to pull down the dead man's house and build another on its site. He found the missing thirty-thousand-pound note in a crevice in the chimney, in which it somehow got lodged after being laid on the mantel piece. It must have been kept many years, and its presentation to the bank was so arranged that the builder became a rich man by a sudden stroke of blind fortune.—Demorest's Monthly.

Ashes to Ashes in Japan.

There are three large cremation places in Osaka, and one of these I visited the other day. It is situated near the Kidzugawa, outside the city limits, and is surrounded by a high wall. The appearance of the place from the road is similar to that of a temple, were it not for the chimney, which towers aloft about sixty feet. In main crematory there are twenty large furnaces, each capable of burning three bodies, so that sixty corpses can be reduced to ashes at the same time. Operations commence at eleven in the evening, and by three o'clock in the morning the process is completed. Cremations do not take place in the day. When I visited the place there were five bodies awaiting cremation, three grown-up persons and two children. It was then late, and no more were expected. I was particularly struck with the scrupulous cleanliness of the cremation establishment.—Osaka letter in the Hiogo News.

The Juvenile Offenders.

On Thursday morning last the boys against whom warrants had been issued for breaking and entering the boat house of Benjamin F. Bass, the Adams Academy, and the Coddington school-house, were brought before Judge Humphrey for trial. Preliminary to the examination the court room was cleared of all not specially interested. Mr. Sigourney Butler appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. James E. Tirrell for the defendants, and there was present beside, Mr. Hart, from the Board of Visitors of the State Board of Charities. The boys, seven in number, sat on a settee facing the court, and looking, the most of them, concerned enough, but not more so than their fathers, who were near them.

Witnesses were first heard as to the facts set forth in the warrants. These were persons to whom the boys had, at different times, confessed their offence. It was plainly shown that they had maliciously and feloniously entered the above places, stolen some articles and destroyed others. Some of the boys were evidently more guilty than others, but all were implicated in the offenes.

When the witnesses were done, Mr. Butler presented the case in behalf of the prosecution. It was evident that he appreciated the seriousness of the offence, and that he was conscientiously careful to have the case conducted for the best interest of the town and the moral welfare of the community. It was plainly evident, he said, the boys were guilty of serious crimes against the laws of the state, and, moreover, that their example was injurious to other boys. Here was something to be taken hold of energetically, for otherwise there was no knowing how far the evil might spread. For the sake of other boys of the town who may be on the verge of wrong-doing, and for the sake of the offenders themselves, severe punishment should be meted out. The parents of the offenders should suffer in this punishment for being so oblivious of what their boys were reading and doing. We were brought face to face with an astounding fact,—that a flood of deplorably deleterious literature was undermining the morals of the young. Books and papers with flash titles, and containing the most pernicious reading were distributed everywhere. Boys received from them vicious ideas and were led into bad ways. Parents were not nearly as careful as they should be with regard to what their children read. He was aware of no law that could reach those who published and sold this stuff, but public opinion should interpose and stamp it out. In asking that severe measures be taken he felt that he had behind him the other members of the school committee which he represented. But he left the case in the hands of the court, with entire confidence in its discrimination and justice.

Mrs. Claflin, of the school committee, in a few words addressed the court, suggesting that justice rather than severity should be employed. She was aware that a great offence had been committed, but hoped the youthfulness of the offenders would have weight with the court. She would not have spoken, she said, but the school committee hardly had had the opportunity since the appointment of new members to consider the case and arrange for it.

Mr. Hart then addressed the Court. He was appointed by the State, he said, to see that juvenile offenders were rightly cared for, and that not only present punishment for crime should be considered, but also the future opportunities of the criminals. In the present case a serious crime had been committed,—one for which men were sent to state prison. He would not by anything he should say lessen the estimate of that crime. The boys had gone very far; they had gone a long distance on the downward road; they were deserving of severe punishment. Still he would suggest that here was a case in which mercy might interpose in behalf of the future of the criminals. He would advise leniency towards them. They were young, and yet had time in which to reform. They should be sternly advised by the court, and then returned to their parents and guardians, whom he understood to be competent persons, with the admonition to exercise greater care in the training of the children.

After a few words by J. E. Tirrell, the Judge proceeded to deliver his sentence. He said he had little to add to the words of Mr. Butler and Mr. Hart. This he would say, however, that it seemed strange to him that children could go so far in criminal ways without the knowledge of their parents. There must be something lacking in their government of their children when the children could read such literature and do such things unknown to their natural guardians. Advice from the Court, he thought, was not enough in the present case. Something more should be done. The crime committed was a serious one, and the influence of the criminals upon other boys was to be considered. In regard to five of the boys he could see that it might be enough to have their case continued for a time; but with regard to the other two he could not think that it was at all advisable that they should remain in Quincy. He therefore had the parents or guardians of five of the boys recognize in the sum of $200 to appear with them in court June 12th. The father of one of the remaining boys signified his readiness to remove his boy at once, and he also was put on probation. The case of the seventh boy was continued two weeks, to give his parents time to secure a place for him outside of Quincy. In the event of failure the court itself would prescribe some institution.

So ends for the present a case which has excited in our town a great deal of interest. It has painfully revealed two facts perilous to the proper training of children. The first is that children are suffered to have too great a liberty to do as they please with their time, and are not persistently enough corrected when they have done manifest wrong. Much is overlooked and excused in deference to that good-easy notion that "boys will be boys." But there are boys and boys. A little fellow who is roguish and playful and adventurous is boyish and most often very lovable. But one who is cruel to animals, who in his play is harsh and destructive, who swears and lies and smokes cigarettes, is not so much boyish as vicious. Strict surveillance should be exercised with regard to his time and habits. Neither he nor any other boy should be permitted to go out after dark without a guardian, nor should he or any other boy be indulged in unlimited play. The second fact makes necessary these precautions. That fact, and it is tremendous in its possibilities of evil, is that a literature of moral and intellectual death is thrust upon our children. Mr. Butler did not speak of this matter any too strongly. It is the lawless adventure, the ruffianism, the robbery and raven of the western border life held up to our youth for imitation. First, it is garnished and set forth in sensational articles in the dailies; and then it is wrought up into exciting novels which with ill-directed care are suited to the feeblest intellect. In this form they are sold at news counters, sent through the mails, and we have even seen the agents of them standing in front of our school houses and delivering them to the children as they came out. What can be more pernicious than this evil! It is in the very air. Surely, parents cannot be too vigilant. It is to be hoped that the actions of the boys who were tried last Thursday will be a warning to all.

FAIR.

The ladies held a fair during the past week on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, in the vestry of the Congregational Church. It has been well attended and a pleasant time enjoyed each evening. A supper served every night has proved a great attraction and has been liberally patronized. The flower table, in charge of some half dozen young ladies deserves special mention as one of the prettiest features of the fair. On Thursday, the last night, all fancy articles, candy, etc., remaining on hand, were disposed of by auction. The receipts are highly satisfactory, and all who have worked so steadily during the week feel gratified with the result.

CHARACTER.

Rev. J. L. Harris preached an excellent sermon on "character" last Sunday evening, which was specially prepared for young people, and was full of good advice and kindly admonition. It gave many a better idea of life and its responsibilities. On account of the stormy evening the church was not filled, and it is therefore hoped that Mr. Harris may be persuaded to repeat his discourse at no late day.

To-morrow night his sermon will be on some Bible character.

THEFT.

About 12 o'clock on Thursday night of last week, the domestic at Mr. Wm. G. Prescott's, North street, heard footsteps in the yard, and going without a light to the sitting room window, saw plainly three fellows, one of whom she recognized as young Keegan, who has already figured as a young criminal, stealing fish from Mr. Prescott's loaded cart. The girl immediately called for help, but before the house was aroused all had fled. Keegan was arrested Friday morning, and on Saturday brought before the court and fined $10 and costs, and being unable to pay was sent to the House of Correction for thirty days.

The same night Mr. I. P. Bent's barn was entered and some fish stolen, doubtless by the same parties.

Soldiers' Bounty.

At a meeting called by the Committee on Finance, held at the Selectmen's room, on Monday afternoon last, a hearing was had in reference to paying the bounty asked for by Mr. Chubbuck and others, who re-enlisted between Dec. 1, 1863, and April 20th, 1864.

These veteran soldiers whose term of service expired between these periods were urged to re-enlist, and promised a bounty by the town, of $125 if they would do so, as Quincy was short on its quota, and it must be filled. They did re-enlist, and served faithfully, but never received the bounty promised because the State passed a law a few months after, making it illegal for the towns to pay bounties.

The greatest difficulty in paying the bounty, which presented itself at the hearing, was, there is no record on the town's books to show that any particular soldier who went to the war received any bounty; and as there were 847 soldiers furnished by Quincy in the war, might not one hundred or two hundred more petition for a bounty; and if they did could the town refuse to pay them? There is not a shadow of doubt but these soldiers are entitled to a bounty agreeable to promise; but how can the matter be honorably and righteously settled without leading to further difficulty.

For the Patriot

Soldiers' Bounties.

The question of whether bounties shall be paid to certain soldiers of the late war is to come before a town meeting for decision. As the matter has excited some interest both in Quincy and elsewhere, the committee to which the warrant was referred have directed the portion of their report relating to Article 19, to be furnished for publication in advance, in order that the voters of the town may be fully apprised of the circumstances of the case, and prepared to vote understandingly upon it.

The article is as follows:—

ART. 19. To see if the town will pay a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to certain soldiers who served during the late war as part of the quota of the town of Quincy, and have never received any bounty from the town, and appropriate a sum of money therefor.

REPORT.

The committee have to report that a public hearing was given on this article, and a statement was made of the facts involved. Under the act of the Legislature recently passed the amount to be appropriated for bounties to certain soldiers of the late war cannot exceed $2500, and for those bounties there are not as yet known to be above twenty applicants. Without in any way going into the merits of individual cases among these applicants, the committee is unable to recommend the town to pass the vote submitted to it. It would appear to indirectly reopen the whole question of bounties, paid, not paid, or promised, twenty years ago. In the course of the investigation the committee was surprised to find that the town had no vouchers or pay-rolls showing what bounties had been paid, or to whom. There is not, as far as can be learned, a scratch of the pen on file indicating that the town ever paid a dollar of bounty to any individual soldier. Yet it is supposed that over $100,000 was thus paid out. Under these circumstances nothing but the lapse of time can ever quiet these claims. If they are once reopened it is not easy to see where they will stop. The only evidence in any case will be the statement of each claimant that a bounty was promised to him but never paid. The officers of the town during the war are many of them dead; nor can those yet living recall particular events so long gone by. While, therefore, cases of individual hardship may be incurred by treating these claims as now barred by time, just as revolutionary claims are barred by time, yet your committee think it would be wiser to adopt this course than, twenty years after the event, to open the way to what may prove a series of similar claims in which from the utter absence of evidence it would be impossible to either prevent fraud or to do justice. Your committee is further induced to recommend this disposition of the matter in view of the unprecedented liberality which Congress is evincing in dealing with all claims of soldiers whether for pension or bounties, arising out of the late war.

[From the foregoing portion of the report Messrs. Hodges, Field, Cahill, Malone, Eaton, Spear, Duggan and Hall of the committee dissent. The remainder of the report and the accompanying form of votes were unanimously agreed to.]

Should, however, the town take a different view of the question, and vote to pay said claims, your committee submit the following:

Voted: That the sum of $2500 be appropriated to payment of soldiers' bounties under the recent vote of the town; and the Selectmen are instructed to secure the services of the Hon. George White, or if his services cannot be obtained those of some other suitable person, not a resident of the town, to act as a commissioner to receive, audit, and approve or reject any claims for bounties which may be made under the act of Legislature recently passed.

Voted: That in each case where the commissioner aforesaid shall certify in writing that he is satisfied from the evidence submitted to him, and verified on oath, that the claimant, being a veteran or soldier then serving on an enlistment of not less than two years, re-enlisted in the quota of Quincy, between the dates specified in the act, and upon the promise of receiving a bounty of $125 from the town, which bounty for any reason was not paid, in such case the Selectmen may pay to the soldier so certified to, the whole, or any such portion of said sum of $125 which shall appear to be due him, taking therefor a discharge in full for all war services rendered which shall be placed on file among the vouchers of the town.

Yield of Potatoes on Phosphate.

FRANKLIN, MASS., Sept. 23, '83.

I have owned a farm seventeen years, and had thought that barnyard manure was indispensable to a good crop of potatoes. This year I used Bradley's Phosphate, and have the best crop I ever raised. On less than two-thirds of an acre, I got two hundred bushels of good potatoes, with only a very small proportion of small ones. I shall use Bradley's Phosphate, and no other, as long as I work a farm. From a single hill, I got thirty-four good, merchantable potatoes, weighing twenty-one pounds. J. M. DORMOTT.

ODD FELLOWSHIP.

Mt. Wollaston Lodge, No. 80, Reorganized at Quincy.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM AMONG THE NEW MEMBERS AND BRETHREN.

We have from time to time noticed in the PATRIOT the movement being made in Quincy towards the organization of Mt. Wollaston Lodge, and now we find it consummated. The week now drawing to a close has certainly been an eventful and encouraging one to Odd Fellowship in this town. Never, we think, and here we use the words of several of the Grand Officers, was a lodge started with a more flourishing outlook, for Mt. Wollaston Lodge starts out with twenty-two charter members, and over one hundred applications for membership, and among them excellent citizens of the town.

It was in 1845 that the lodge was first instituted, and for several years it was a very prosperous order in this town; but owing to several misunderstandings among its members, and also with other lodges in the neighborhood, it came to an untimely death in 1852.

Our readers have been kept well posted in regard to the headquarters of the new lodge over Mr. G. Fred. Wilson's store, and the beautiful apartments have only to be seen to be admired. It is hoped they will soon be thrown open to our townspeople for inspection.

On Monday, March 10th, the following grand officers of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Massachusetts came to Quincy to institute Mt. Wollaston Lodge: Samuel Cochran, G. M.; Henry K. Braley, D. G. M.; Edwin L. Pilsbury, G. W.; Charles D. Cole, G. S.; Julius L. Clarke, G. T.; John W. Perkins, G. M.; R. M. Eastman, G. G.; William Parkman, G. C.; George W. Hayden, G. H., James M. Price, A. G. I. Besides the above, the Grand Officers, there were present about one hundred brethren from neighboring lodges; also, one from New York and another from Vermont.

The lodge was instituted in regular form with the following as charter members: George L. Gill, Wm. H. Mears, H. A. Willey, Frank F. Prescott, J. Frank Kemp, Tobias H. Burke, George W. Cummings, James Crossman, Charles L. Orne, Walter H. Ripley, Charles L. Badger, Aubigne A. Hunt, William L. Qualey, James R. Qualey, James Craig, Frank W. Folsom, Alexander Grant, J. H. Layton, Dudley Folsom, Thomas Talbot, Edward Hodge, John Dunston.

The first business following the institution was the nomination and election of officers, and the following brothers were the choice of the lodge:

N. G., William L. Qualey.
V. G., James R. Qualey.
Rec. Sec., Frank F. Prescott.
Per. Sec., Walter H. Ripley.
Treasurer, George L. Gill.
C., Frank W. Folsom.
W., Tobias H. Burke.
R. S. N. G., William H. Mears.
L. S. N. G., Aubigne A. Hunt.
R. S. V. G., J. Frank Kemp.
L. S. V. G., Thomas Talbot.
R. S. S., Henry A. Willey.
L. S. S., George W. Cummings.
I. G., James Craig.
Chap., Alexander Grant.
O. G., John Dunston.

The above gentlemen were then installed into their respective chairs, and will be known as the first officers of the new lodge.

The applicants for membership were then considered, and after thirty or more had been accepted, it was agreed to proceed to the initiation of some of them, who had previously been notified to be in attendance. Sixteen candidates were initiated in regular form, after which the Lodge closed until 7.30 in the evening, and the members, with their visitors, adjourned to the Robertson House, where supper was served by caterer D. Fred French. Short addresses by the Grand Officers and others followed, and they were very flattering to the new lodge.

At 7.30 in the evening the lodge was again opened. Several of the Grand Officers had returned to their homes, but large delegations were present from Neponset, Hyde Park, Braintree and Hingham, and the hall was tested to its utmost. By actual count there were over 150 visitors, making a grand total of over 200. Sixteen more candidates were initiated, and several applications were acted upon. The lodge then closed, to be opened again on Tuesday evening for initiation.

A session of the lodge was held on Tuesday evening, and eighteen candidates were initiated in regular form, and thirty-six applicants elected. A surprise awaited the members of the lodge on this evening, for they were presented, through Mr. Samuel A. Bates, a member of the old Mt. Wollaston Lodge, with the banner formerly held by the lodge as then organized. It was a present to them by the ladies of Quincy and has been admirably preserved during the generation which has elapsed. Mr. Bates received a vote of thanks from the new lodge.

Wednesday evening another meeting was held and twelve gentlemen were made acquainted with the mysteries of the order. More applications were considered.

On Thursday evening seventeen more candidates were initiated, making a total of seventy-nine by initiation, and a grand total of one hundred and two.

Last evening (Friday) another meeting was to be held when several more were to be initiated.

The work of initiation on the various occasions has been very satisfactorily performed by the officers of the new lodge, and many were the compliments bestowed upon them by the numerous visitors during the week. It clearly showed that they had devoted much time to learning and rehearsing their parts. The lodge having held sessions every night during this week, many times until twelve o'clock, it is not strange if they are somewhat fatigued and make mistakes. They have initiated about one hundred candidates, a task which many older lodges would not wish to undertake in the short space of a week, and the candidates should be thankful for the quick manner in which they have been admitted, and also excuse the officers for the few inaccuracies that have occurred.

The charter now held by Mt. Wollaston Lodge is the same one that was held by the lodge as formerly instituted, and is in excellent condition, it having been carefully preserved by the Grand Secretary.

The Odd Fellows boom will long be remembered, and it will be the desire of all to make Mt. Wollaston Lodge, No. 80, the best in the State.

The Huckins Estate.

A hearing was had on article 20 of the warrant, by the Committee on Finance, on Monday, to see if the town will pay back to the heirs of James Huckins taxes that have been doubly assessed. It appeared by the evidence that the Huckins farm formerly comprised eighty acres, and that the heirs had paid taxes for fourteen years on eight acres of land which formerly belonged to the farm, but was sold a year or two before Mr. Huckins died and has been taxed since 1867 to other parties. The amount claimed is from $600 to $700.

There are probably many cases where persons are taxed and do pay taxes on property that they do not own; but, as a general thing, it is the fault of the parties assessed in not giving notice to the assessors when they have sold their property, and are accordingly to blame. The law says that every person liable to taxation shall return a true inventory to the assessors every year, and if they neglect to do so, the liability falls on their own shoulders.

A case was mentioned at the hearing by Mr. E. W. Underwood, where Hon. Charles F. Adams was taxed by the town of Quincy, on a ten-thousand-dollar bond for many years after it was sold and the money used in purchasing real estate in Boston.

Probably there are to-day a score or more of persons paying taxes in Quincy, on property they have formerly owned, who have sold the same, but failed to notify the assessors and to see that their name was crossed off from their list.

TOWN MEETING. A petition has been sent to the Selectmen asking them to call a special town meeting on Monday morning, March 24th, to vote on the bounty act recently passed by the State Legislature, in relation to paying Murray C. C. Chubbuck and others, a bounty of $125, as promised them by the town if they would re-enlist in the Quincy quota. The check list must be used and the polls be kept open four hours, as will be noticed by the act, which is published in to-day's issue. The amount the town is asked to raise for this purpose is $2500.

THE PEOPLES' COURSE ONCE MORE. Now that the severity of the winter is over and the weather, though it does not promise, is expected to be more settled, the committee of the Peoples' Course purpose to give a few more entertainments. The first will be next Saturday evening, Mar. 22d, when Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Dixie will appear in a double play. These excellent actors were much enjoyed when here during the last season. Indeed, they gave one of the best entertainments of the course and we know the townspeople will be delighted to learn that they are to be here again. On the Saturday evening of April 5th, the "Mrs. H. M. Smith Concert Company" will present an attractive programme. Mr. Powers, the well-known actor, who gives Esmeralda entire, is in this company. Admission, as heretofore will be ten cents, with this exception, that there will be sold some reserved seats for twenty-five cents each. Last season the committee found themselves at a loss of over $80, and they adopt this means to re-imburse themselves. The people no doubt will readily co-operate. After to-day reserved seats will be for sale at Mr. J. O. Holden's store.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of same, as follows:

SEC. 1. The town of Quincy is authorized, in the manner provided in section two of this act, to raise by taxation a sum of money not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars, and appropriate the same to the payment of a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to each soldier or sailor who re-enlisted, between the first day of December, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and the twentieth day of April, in the year of Lord eighteen hundred and sixty-four, in the quota of said town, and served until the close of the late war, or was honorably discharged during said period, and has never received any bounty from said town: provided, that said town shall not be re-imbursed by the Commonwealth for any money paid under authority of this act.

A long hearing was had on the petition of Abigail K. Souther, wife of John Souther, of Cohasset, for a separate maintenance on account of cruelty. After listening to a dozen or more witnesses, Judge White decided that it was best for the petitioner and her husband to live apart, and that Mrs. Souther was entitled to a certain part of the property now owned and occupied by him in Cohasset, valued from $1400 to $1800; and unless the parties interested could agree as to the amount, he would at a future time have a hearing on that matter.

Assembly at Milton.

The third assembly of the "old maids" this season, was given in Milton Town Hall, on Friday evening, March 7th, in the form of a fancy sheet and pillow-case party. Great taste and skill was exhibited in the arrangement of their toilets, by both ladies and gentlemen, while masked, although in several cases it was difficult to distinguish the ladies from the gentlemen. After unmasking many appeared in fancy head-dress, some of which were striking and attractive. Refreshments were served during intermission by the "old maids" in their usual graceful and pleasing manner. Music was furnished by Stetson and Cushing's Band of So. Weymouth. About thirty couple were present and all declared themselves equally delighted with the privileges which the evening afforded. It is hoped that this will not be the last this season. Z.

ACCIDENT. A Washington, D. C. paper gives the following particulars of an accident which has befallen a former resident of Atlantic:

"Mr. Samuel Thomas, one of the oldest clerks in the third assistant postmaster general's office, recently slipped on the ice and severely injured his shoulder. The accident will cause him to be confined to his house for some time."

His many friends in this town will be sorry to learn of his misfortune, and it is to be hoped that the accident is not so serious as anticipated.

☞ The free text-book bill, having passed both houses of the Massachusetts Legislature, will go into effect on August 1st. School supplies of all kinds are included with the books.

Roads and Road Commissioners.

QUINCY, March 12, 1884.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Since the election of the 3d inst., there have been many expressions of opinion that the voters of the town did an unwise, possibly a dangerous, thing in electing me to the office of Road Commissioner, simply because I have been connected with the introduction of the water supply; those who hold this opinion supposing, doubtless, that my interest as a stockholder and director in the Water Company, would unfavorably influence my action as a member of the Board of Road Commissioners. Much blame has unfairly been laid upon me for all the petty annoyances arising from the manner in which the trenches opened by the contractor have been refilled. I do not deserve this, for it is no affair of mine, either personally or as a member of the Board of Directors of the Water Company.

The charter conferred several rights and privileges, under the Selectmen. The law confers certain powers upon the Road Commissioners. During the past year I have been neither one nor the other. The Selectmen or Road Commissioners may have been at fault over the matter of authority, on a purely technical point. But that matter belongs to the past. The greater part of the pipes is laid. As soon as the frost is out of the ground, no doubt by April 1st, the surface of the trenches will have been replaced in as good condition as the rest of the highway, and in the possession of the benefit of water in abundance, the annoyances of this winter will soon be forgotten.

However that may be, if the town does not rescind its action in electing a Board of Road Commissioners on the 24th, I shall, as a member of that Board, insist upon its power to look after the manner in which the surface of the highway shall be replaced, no matter under whose authority the trenches for the water pipes are opened. Whatever my interest in the Water Company may be, I have none that is paramount to the interest I have in the town. If there is any feeling either way, I believe it is in favor of the town rather than against it.

A little consideration by the citizens of Quincy will show them that they are in error in believing that I have any interest not identical with theirs; they will see that if I was unduly active in forwarding the introduction of water, it was only because all circumstances favored it. The people wanted it; they have wanted it for the past seven years. More than that, they have needed it; and when all the circumstances combine to favor a project, and the project itself is one commended by sound sense, a very humble person may supply the little force requisite for its execution.

I am as firmly convinced now as at any time during the past ten years that there is no one thing that contributes so much to the growth of a town in all directions as good highways. Highways convey to the persons riding or walking over them a very good idea of the condition of the civilization of the community. Being seen and felt more forcibly than any other public work, they make the strongest impression. A community that allows its streets to be barely passable, is likely to have other institutions barely passable also. To have good streets requires an idea at the bottom of the system. Ideas that are to be embodied in permanent form, especially in stone, must be put into that form by some body having an element of permanency in it. There can be no doubt that a commission, such as our Board of Road Commissioners, has a greater element of permanency than any Board of paid officials could have, or than a Board of Selectmen could have, even if they were chosen for a term of years, as the Road Commissioners are, for the Selectmen have so many other things to attend to that they must excite opposition from many other causes, and thus to remove a member of a Board of Selectmen on account of his being obnoxious to the voters on one point, might remove a man whom on every other account it would be very desirable to retain.

The ideas I have put forward since March, 1872, I still hold,—there is no way to make roads but to make them. We have the materials, we have the means; we only need tools. No man accomplishes anything without tools; and even if we were only intending to repair the streets, we should have tools to do it with. I do not believe the town should make any "vast immediate expenditure for elaborate machinery and fundamental reconstruction of great lines of highway," no more than did the Board of Road Commissioners of 1883, possibly for other reasons than they have; but I am still in favor of purchasing what tools are needed to properly make or repair a road with.

When the town in 1882 accepted the act under which the Road Commissioners were elected, it unquestionably had determined to begin to construct its streets in a proper manner. It did not believe the construction should be under the Selectmen, for reasons too obvious to mention. When the town voted to authorize the Commissioners to appoint a Superintendent, it believed in the permanency of the Board, and when it voted the money to purchase a roller, it still acted under the same idea. To rescind the vote accepting the act under which the Commissioners are chosen will be taking a step backward, and one I do not believe the town wishes to take.

If, as I have been informed, it is to be advocated solely to get rid of one member who some persons think will not properly perform his duty, it seems to me to be a "vast immediate expenditure" of the power of the town to accomplish a very slight result. Would it not be better to wait and see if the direful results follow, as have been predicted? W. L. FAXON.

TOP-DRESSING. It is the opinion of our best farmers that when mowing lands get so run out, or, as some term it, "bound-out," as to render them unprofitable, they can be usually restored without reseeding by applying 300 to 500 pounds of Bradley's Phosphate per acre, early in the Spring, just before a rain, or upon a light fall of snow; it can also be applied to advantage immediately after mowing. The application of 200 pounds per acre to old pasture land will be found highly beneficial, making a better growth of sweeter and more nutritious grass.

Vegetine has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

Letter of ex-fire commissioner William Fuller, of New Haven, in another column, is worth reading.

For the Patriot.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 11th, 1884.

Congress has now been in session over three months, more than the full term of its second session, and for some reason or other, very little legislation has thus far been perfected. Out of the five thousand bills that have been presented, only sixty-three including thirty-six pension bills have passed the House; while only five bills and nine joint resolutions have passed both Houses, been signed by the President, and become laws. Some think it is owing to the preoccupation of the legislative mind with Presidential speculations, or to the cautious inexperience of new members who are merely using the session to acquaint themselves with parliamentary tactics, and learn the location of the committee rooms. But the mystery is not inscrutable. Not counting the delegates from Territories, there are four hundred and one legislators in a full Congress. Each one of them has equal rights with the remaining four hundred. If every one took a day for talking on every important bill as many are disposed to do, it would require four hundred and one legislative days for consideration of one measure. The difficulty has become a serious one. The silver and currency questions, the land grants, the bankrupt laws, the Presidential succession, the copyright question, and Pacific railway regulation are all of pressing necessity, but the country has to wait while Congressional Sophomores are making oratorical displays. As an instance of the divergent tendency of Congressmen a member broke into the debate on the Naval bill with an allusion to the wool question. A little later he confessed he knew nothing about Naval affairs, and that he could hardly tell which end of a ship went foremost. He next attacked his opponents for parsimony in great matters, and accused them of keeping the surplus revenue idle in the Treasury while the people were being taxed three per cent. per annum on three hundred millions of bonds owned by the people of New York. Another member criticised and soothed the vagrant orator by saying the latter was interesting even when he was irrelevant. At another point in the debate on that day, Mrs. Langtry's charms furnished a theme.

There has been some curiosity to know who would be the new one-thousand-dollar-a-year attachments, called private secretaries that are now allowed to the Senators who are not Chairman of committees. It had been predicted that some of the Senators would appoint their wives, and daughters to these positions, but investigation shows that only masculine relatives are at present drawing pay on the private secretaries list.

Several prominent members of the Womans' Suffrage Association which held a four days convention here during the week, made addresses Saturday before the House Judiciary committee; their objective point being a sixteenth amendment to the constitution. It is noticeable that the movement has passed in a great measure out of the domain of ridicule and is met seriously by those who have to deal with tendencies of society. The leaders show more temperance, and discretion than in the earlier stages of the agitation. The managers are trying to extend their organization, on a system that will bring the cause into universal notice. They propose to enter the political field in a solid body, and use all their resources to defeat candidates not in sympathy with them.

The whiskey men got the set back they feared by the antagonism of an appropriation bill. Great interest was manifested in the attempt of the friends of the bonded whiskey bill to get that measure before the House on Saturday. There was no surprise when Mr. Morrison's move to go into committee of the whole on revenue bills was followed by a motion from Mr. Townsend that the House go into committee on Appropriation bills. The voting was watched with interest, for there was an impression that the result would test the sense of the House not only on the whiskey question, but also on the ability of Chairman Randall to rally a majority in case he should wish to put the Appropriation bills in the way of the low tariff tax reduction bill. The vote was in favor of taking up the Postal Appropriation bill. It cannot however be claimed that any issue was decided by the vote. A large number of Democrats voted in the negative with the Republicans, and an almost equally large number of Republicans with the body of Democrats.

Delegate Caine of Utah made an argument on Saturday before the Committee on Territories in which he criticised the Edmunds and Cassidy bills in relation to polygamy as unconstitutional. He admitted the right of the Government to punish polygamy as a crime if it desired to do so but nevertheless, he said the Mormon's believed it was right. He thought as they helped hold California during the Mexican war, they deserved consideration from the Government. ADAMS.

Pension Legislation.

NEW FEATURES ADVOCATED BY A GRAND ARMY COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1884.

Major George S. Merrill, of Lawrence, is here as a member of the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic which is appearing before the Pensions Committee of both houses of Congress, and presenting the views of the Grand Army on the general subject of pension legislation. The committee has been listened to with much interest by the several committees which have heard it. The members of it start out by declaring themselves opposed to several measures which are before Congress. They oppose the bill to grant a land bounty to all soldiers, believing it is a job; that the land would be sold for a song, and would be of little benefit to soldiers, who can now acquire a homestead easily enough on the public lands, if they desire to do so. The committee also opposes the bill to grant pensions to all soldiers, arguing that the time has not yet come for such action. The committee also opposes the bill to make up the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks in the pay of soldiers during the war, arguing that it would be impossible to calculate the rate of pension, on account of violent fluctuations of gold from day to day.

There are several measures which the committee urges upon Congress. The most important one is a bill for the equalization of bounties, which will probably pass Congress this session, and is likely to take $75,000,000 out of the treasury. It proposes that the rules of evidence to connect disability with service should be made easier, because the members hold that many of the most deserving soldiers cannot furnish the evidence required by the present rule; and the man who went into the hospital and secured a hospital record for comparatively slight causes, has an advantage over other men who may have been equally sick or injured, and yet have remained on active duty. The committee will also ask that the age limit of minor children of deceased soldiers be fixed at 18 years instead of 16 years, as now. It asks that widows or parents of deceased soldiers, if dependent, may receive pensions although they were not dependent at the death of the husband or son. It asks that a pension may be given to a soldier's widow if he be accidentally killed, which is not permitted by the present law. It asks for an increased pension for men who have lost one or both arms, legs or eyes; and it asks that pensions be granted to all survivors of rebel prisons who are now suffering from disability.—Boston Herald.

QUINCY, March 11, 1884.
CHARLES F. ADAMS, JR., Esq.:

DEAR SIR,—Enclosed find slip relating to soldiers' claims, cut from this morning's Boston Herald. If the present tendency towards wild expenditure in this respect is permitted to longer continue unchecked, and immense sums of money to be disbursed, it will only be because of the most astonishing recklessness and want of courage on the part of members of Congress. It may well be asked, Whither are we drifting? The hearing before your committee at Quincy, yesterday, relative to paying bounties purporting to be pledged to soldiers twenty years ago by irresponsible officials, who only wished to secure their own re-election, revealed a state of affairs so thoroughly unbusiness-like, that it must have astonished both the ex-soldiers and the civilians who were present,—even, perhaps, the claimants' counsel. It is high time that some one should stand up boldly, and endeavor to protect the tax-payers against the results of what I call "soldier sentimentalism." The pension, bounty and State aid business, if continued by legislation, will quickly become contagious, and spread worse than the itch. It is not the honest soldier, I find who is clamoring for more money; but is chiefly the rascally pension agents and their co-workers, who do not care whom they plunder. I have observed, since this agitation began, that many of those soldiers who do the most "blowing" and bragging, are the very men who did the least fighting. These are the men who loudly claim that they "saved their country." Sacrifice without pay means something; but those who so loudly cry for recompense in bounties and State aid, simply did their duty for gold. I do not place them one whit above the hired "mercenaries" which history tells us have figured in the wars of the past. The long and short of the whole business is, that, while I believe in fair and reasonable treatment for really deserving soldiers, I think it is time to call a halt in these reckless onslaughts upon the public purse.

Yours truly,
HENRY H. FAXON.

We have received a handsome forty-eight page pamphlet from the Bradley Fertilizer Company, containing a full discussion on commercial fertilizers, and many interesting reports from some of our best farmers. We advise every one interested in farming to obtain one of these pamphlets, as it will be found interesting as well as instructive.

☞ The Boston Herald says that George Thayer, a man about 45 years of age, hailing from Quincy, and whose address would indicate anything but a tramp, was convicted of being a vagrant in the Dorchester District Court Saturday, and sent to the House of Industry for six months.

☞ The Peabody Press says there is a sign in that town which reads: "Loger beir 5 sents a glas." There are no such signs in Quincy now.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

My Neighbor and I.

Oh, I pity my neighbor over the way,
Who has nothing to do but yawn all day;
No little hands to tumble her hair,
No little "nuisance" to vex her with care,
No little "torment" to worry and tease,
Nothing to do but consult her own ease.

Poor, rich neighbor, I am sorry for you—
Sorry, because you have "nothing to do;"
Sorry, because as the days go by
You are restless and weary, you know not why;
And once in a while I can see the trace
Of many a tear on your proud, fair face.

You see, I am only a laborer's wife,
Doing my duty in the treadmill of life;
Joe, my husband, is off all day,
Fighting the giants of want away;
Baby and I are busy, too,
But we've plenty of time to be sorry for you.

Baby's a nuisance, a plague and a joy,
But then, you see, he's my own sweet boy;
I have no time for a groan or a sigh,
No time to be idle as the days go by;
My arms are full as the day is long,
Full as my heart with its happy song.

Poor, rich neighbor over the way,
Watching my baby and me at play;
What of your wealth if your heart is bare?
'Tis to love and be loved that makes life so fair.
No neighbor mine, I can tell you true,
Indeed, I'd rather be I than you.

Farm and Garden.

The Canker Worm.

As often as the season comes round we feel it to be our duty to urge upon all the importance of protecting the apple, cherry and elm trees from the depreations of the canker worm. Already this enemy covers a wide territory, and is yearly extending. This ought not to be, because there is a remedy, which, if faithfully applied, will not only prevent this pest from extending over any more territory, but annihilate him where he has already made his appearance.

If a law could be made and enforced, compelling every person to protect his trees, it would be but a few years before the canker worm would be entirely conquered; but as long as there is one or two persons in each town who will not protect their trees at all, and considerable numbers who afford only a partial protection, so long will the faithful have to continue the fight, or be content to do without apples, and see their beautiful shade trees stripped of their foliage.

We would urge upon every owner of an apple, cherry, or elm tree to see to it that no canker worms find their way up the trunks of the trees the coming spring.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

We advise all who use tarred paper and Morrill & Co.'s tree ink, to commence at once, as soon as the frost starts out of the ground, and continue the application as often as the ink becomes hard enough to allow the grubs to crawl over it. Morrill & Co.'s tree ink is for sale at the PATRIOT office, in cans of three to ten pounds, at manufacturers' prices.

Diseases of Poultry.

In the first place I hold that a fowl well cared for will not get sick, and when she does it is better to look for the cause, and then you will generally find the cure. Mismanagement is in most cases the trouble.

1st. Hens called non-sitters, do not need crowding to make them lay. They should rather be held back for health. Many times they are crowded with warm feed and pepper, even through moulting, and fail under the pressure—lay themselves to death.

2d. Sitters, or those predisposed to fat, are over-fed with warm meal, and not enough of wheat and the like, and are taken with apoplexy or leg weakness, or cannot drop the egg, and die on the nest.

3d. By harsh handling, or not having access to shell-forming material, an egg is broken before laid, and death is the result.

4th. A few small hens are put with heavy vigorous cocks, and are killed.

5th. They go without water perhaps one day, and have plenty the next, or they have foul water to drink all the time, and are soon taken with gapes, or diarrhœa, or cholera.

6th. They do not have what they want, and are forced to eat filthy or poisonous matter; or

7th. They do not have a change of diet, and are good subjects for disease.

8th. They do not have a good clean dust bath and green food, and are troubled with vermin or lose their feathers.

9th. One or two are quarrelsome and worry others to death.

10th. They go out in all weather, stand in the rain and snow, or are obliged to roost where the wind blows on them; they get cold, and have the roup.

11th. They don't have animal food and they eat their own feathers and eggs.

In any one of the cases the first thing done should be to look for the cause, and check it at once.

Anecdotes.

"May I have the honor to conduct your daughter to the supper table?" asked a society gentleman of a lady from the country.

"May you take her to supper?" was the response; "why, of course, and you can take me, too. That's what we came here for."

"Sarah Jane," said a fond mother to her daughter the other morning, "Did Daniel Johnson kiss you on the steps last night?"

"No, mamma, he did not."

If the fond parent had said mouth, instead of steps, it would have troubled Jane to reply, although, after all, steps are things at a door.

"Heard about Miss Spliggs?"

"No; the one that's such a talker?"

"Yes, she's got a place in a bank at a big salary."

"You don't say! What's she going to do in the bank?"

"O, they've made her teller."

"Judge, I desire to be excused from jury service."

"Why," asked the court.

"Because I can only hear with one ear.

"Oh, you'll do," said the judge; "we only hear one side of a case at a time."

"Why," asked a governess of her little charge, "do we pray God to give us our daily bread? Why don't we ask for four or five days, or a week?"

Because we want it fresh," replied the ingenious child.

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

From Graham's Lectures.

"Alcohol, though not commonly considered a narcotic, is nevertheless properly classed with those substances, for its effects on the living body are essentially the same. It is produced, as we have seen, not by any formative process of nature, but by a process of decay or the decomposition of the saccharine matter of organized bodies. The grand characteristic of all narcotic substances is their anti vital or life-destroying property. When they are not so highly concentrated or energetic as to destroy life instantly, they produce the most powerful, and often the most violent and distressing vital reaction, which causes a correspondent degree of exhaustion, depression and prostration; and they often destroy life purely by vital exhaustion in this violent and continued vital reaction.

"But when the discriminating sensibilities of the system have been depraved by the habitual use of these substances, and its powers of giving a sympathetic alarm greatly impaired, these same substances, even the most deadly in nature, if the quantity be only commensurate with the degree of physiological depravity may be habitually introduced into the stomach, and even received into the general circulation, and diffused over the whole system, and slowly but surely destroy the constitution, and always greatly increase the liability to disease, and almost certainly create it, and invariably aggravate it, without any of those symptoms which are ordinarily considered as the evidences of the action of a poison on the living body; but, on the contrary, their stimulation is attended with that pleasurable feeling and agreeable mental consciousness which lead the mind to the strongest confidence in their salutary nature and effects.

"Even in our own land of boasted intelligence, in the middle of the nineteenth century of the Christian era, and in our very colleges of learning, the idea that alcohol is a poison has been treated with ridicule and contempt,—as too absurd for any but a visionary fanatic to believe; and yet there is no truth in science more perfectly demonstrable than that alcohol is one of the most energetic and fatal poisons known to man; and with equal certainty can it be proved that tea, coffee, tobacco and opium are powerful poisons to the human body."

Fashion Notes.

Blue and gold colors are combined in lovely gradations of shades in the new spring batistes and zephyrs.

Black silk and satin dresses are brightened with bows of gold-colored satin ribbon and coquilles of black lace.

Dotted veils are extensively worn. They should not be worn over the eyes oftener than can be helped, as they are very injurous to the sight.

The choice colors in plush this season are the Titan red, golden brown and moss green. For suits velvet has taken the place of plush to a great extent.

There seems to be a growing tendency for the excessively short jackets which always suggest the idea that the makers were short of material. They mostly match the dresses they accompany.

Evening dresses of great taste and elegance are made of the new ecru batistes nearly covered by gold or silver figures that make them look like cloths of gold or silver; but this stuff comes among millinery goods only.

Frills of lace down the front of the corsage are considered more elegant than buttons.

Plain or fine striped silk floss hose are most fashionable for both day and evening wear.

Evening dresses with pointed waists and V necks are as becoming as they are fashionable.

Household Receipts.

DESSERT IN A HURRY. A quickly-made dessert is this: Make a batter as if for common griddle cakes, then add an egg and some fruit, say stewed or canned berries; drain the juice from them and stir them into the batter; fry in a little lard, and serve with pudding sauce.

A good dish for breakfast is made by chopping pieces of cold boiled or fried ham just as fine as it is possible to chop them; mix them with cold mashed potatoes, an egg or two, a little butter or cream, or both; form into balls, flour them, melt a little butter in a frying-pan, and brown the balls. Serve hot.

To wipe the dust from papered walls take a clean, soft piece of flannel. Of course, it must not be damp, but the dry flannel will remove the dust.

Stale slices of bread may be made into milk toast. Toast quickly, butter, put into a deep dish and pour over the whole boiling milk; serve very hot.

As a gargle for sore throat, a tablespoonful of vinegar and as much water, with a sprinkling of cayenne pepper, and used as a gargle, usually affords relief. Most of the diseases and accidents that are constantly occurring could be remedied or avoided by resorting to such remedies and appliances as are to be found in every home.

Conundrums.

Why are kisses like the creation? They are made of nothing and are very good.

Why are loafers, as a general thing, no fools? They are an owing set of fellows.

Why are plum stones like milestones? They are never found in pears (pairs.)

Why is the squirrel accused of chattering? He is a great tail (tale) bearer.

Why is a lie not a lie? A lie is a hyperbole, that is, a figure, and figures cannot lie.

Why is a fast young lady like a steamboat? She never goes ahead without a swell after her.

When is a lawyer like a donkey? When he is drawing a conveyance.

"Jesse James" in Braintree.

On Monday evening one of the most checky and audacious piece of performances we have heard of, and that has never been exceeded amongst us, was then enacted. On the evening mentioned, a young man about seventeen years of age entered Mr. Horace Dana's grocery store, on the corner of Union and Middle streets, and asked Mr. Dana to put up some goods amounting in value to $2.19. This done, he told Mr. Dana to charge the same to Mrs. Hinckley, and left the store instanter. Mrs. Hinckley not having an open account with Mr. Dana, the young scamp was ordered to stop, but he didn't. He was joined by a "chum" who was standing outside, and they both skedaddled down the street at a rapid rate towards East Braintree.

Mr. Dana fired six shots at them as they disappeared, but none of the bullets took effect. Afterwards Mr. Dana and Mr. T. H. Libby harnessed up and pursued the thieves, but could find no trace of them, and so the matter rests.

Prize Drill and Ball.

The third annual prize drill and ball of the Braintree Military Company came off at the Town Hall last night, with brilliant success. There was a large and fashionable gathering. On the platform we noticed Capt. Greenough and Lieut. Leary of Fort Warren, who were present as judges, and also Prof. T. H. Dearing, Col. A. C. Drinkwater, George D. Willis, Esq., and Alva S. Morrison.

The early evening was occupied by company, bayonet, sword and prize drills. The commanding officers of the evening were Capt. W. E. Morrison and Lieuts. H. L. Dearing and F. G. Morrison. The principal interest centred in the prize drills for medals. In the drill by a squad of six non-commissioned officers, the gold medal for superiority was awarded to Sergt. Spear, although his closest competitor, Sergt. Pierce, was so nearly his equal that he was called out from the ranks and publicly complimented by the judges. In the drill by a squad of 12 privates for silver medals, the first prize was awarded to Private Whitman and the second to Private Wilson. After the distribution of the prizes, the company was presented by Miss Minnie Potter, in behalf of the young ladies of the town, with a large, and very handsome silk banner. The military exercises were followed by dancing, an excellent supper provided by E. N. Reed of Boston. The music was by Porter's Orchestra of Brockton. The whole affair was a complete and brilliant success, upwards of 150 couples participating.—Braintree Observer, March 6.

From William Fuller, of 349 Howard Avenue, one of New Haven's most prominent citizens:

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 13, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—For the last two years I have been afflicted with a combination of liver troubles and malaria, and have employed many prominent physicians and have tried a change of climate, but with no success. My stomach was very weak, and I could retain little or nothing upon it for days at a time. I also had occasional sinking spells that my friends regarded as very serious. I had lost fifty pounds of flesh, and was rapidly on the decline, so that I was unable to attend to my business, when a friend suggested a trial of your "Red Jacket Bitters." I began to make inquiries of many who had used your bitters, and found but one sentiment expressed in regard to their great medicinal virtues. My faith was still limited in their being a source of any help or benefit to me in my complicated disease. I finally thought best to make a trial of them, and have taken two bottles. I have gained seven pounds of flesh, and I am rapidly on the gain. I can cheerfully say that they are the best medicine I have ever used for the above troubles, and I feel as if I had a new lease of life.

Yours very respectfully,
WILLIAM FULLER.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

Such is Life.

Such is life,—its varied phases
Ripple o'er the sea of time,
Fortune smiles, reverses, changes,
Thus they closely intertwine.

Such is life! Our wants are many,
Seeking much that is in vain,
Learning truly, few, if any,
Can unchangeable remain.

Such is life! We think of trials,
While our blessings we forget;
Think of crosses and denials,
Seldom how they should be met.

But each day claims our attention,
What is needful to supply,
While our wants demand discretion,
What good judgment should deny.

Such is life! Each day is weaving
Incidents both false and true,
Lessons on our minds are leaving,
We should carefully review.

Day by day a leaf we're turning,
Jotting down life's ins and outs,
While within hope bright is burning,
Then again come anxious doubts.

Health to-day we are enjoying,
On the morrow prostrate lie,
Fruition every means employing
To restore the love-lit eye.

Soon we hear glad voices singing,
And the sweetness calms our fear,
Cheerful in the chorus ringing,
Such is life, each changing year.

A. J. K.

Miscellany.

SEEKING HIS FORTUNE.

"Of course he'll make his fortune!" said Lally Hilton.

"A man with his talents cannot possibly help it," said Rose.

"I wish I was going to the city," said Joe, the younger brother, with a sigh which was pumped up from the very soles of his hob-nailed shoes.

And Willis Hilton smiled in a superior fashion and looked after the key of his new leather satchel, while, at the same time, he made sure that the steel chain of his silver watch—Uncle Zephania's gift—was securely fastened to the bottom of his waistcoat.

Willis Hilton was a genius—at least so his mother, his Uncle Zephania and the principal of the district school had always declared.

He had a manuscript poem in his travelling bag, as well as a series of sketches, which were meant to reflect in a sarcastic style on the leading follies and frivolities of the day, and the notes of a novelette which he intended some day to write.

He had also a change of linen, a fountain pen, some new cravats and a celluloid collar, to say nothing of a bottle of camphor, some of Grandmother Smith's salve and some homemade sticking plaster.

And what more could any young man from the country desire for an outfit.

Mrs. Petronel, who had visited at the farm house summer before last (and whose big trunk couldn't be carried up the winding stairway, but had to be left in the milk room during the whole of her sojourn) had told him, when she went away, always to consider her house, in Beckford square, his home, and honest Willis had taken her at her word.

So he kissed the old grandmother, wrung Uncle Zeph's horny hand, hugged the girls all around, and gave little Joe his one-bladed knife as a parting souvenir, and then departed by the train for the great city wherein, according to his hopes and dreams, were centered all the germs of his future prosperity.

Mrs. Petronel did not remember him just at first. This was a little awkward, especially as her sisters—two pretty plump young ladies — stood watching the scene behind the statue of Psyche in the hall.

Willis Hilton blushed, stammered and explained, wishing himself the while, in the antipodes.

"So awkward of me!" said Mrs. Petronel, with a sudden gleam of recollection. "But you know it is ages since I saw you. I remember now perfectly. Mr. Hilton, to be sure! How good of you to come and call! I'm only sorry we are just going out. I would ask you to dinner to-morrow, only there are a lot of people coming who would all be strangers to you, and you wouldn't enjoy it at all. But I hope you will drop in some evening when we are alone. Family at the farm house all well? So glad to hear it! But I won't detain you any longer. Good-bye!"

And Mrs. Petronel smiled him out of the door with so bland an air that our poor hero hardly knew that he had been civilly dismissed, until he found himself standing on the outside of the huge blackwalnut panels, with an echo in his ears which sounded very like—

"The assurance of these country people! Why, they are the merest strangers in the world to me."

Willis Hilton bit his lips; the color mounted in a burning flood to his cheek.

Had some one knocked him down, the revulsion could not have been more sudden or painful.

Mrs. Petronel had stayed six weeks at Hilton farm, and he had driven her out, taken her to the prettiest places in the neighborhood, collected ferns and grasses for her—in short, been her faithful servant and cavalier the whole time—and now she ignored the invitation she had so cordially given, and "hoped he would drop in some evening when they were all alone."

And he thought of his slender stock of money, and wondered what he had better do? Of course there would not be so much sordid difficulties to consider after he had once sold his poem and found a market for his "Satirical Sketches." But in the meantime—

"Mr. Hilton! Oh, I beg your pardon, but I've been running so fast!"

And Willis found himself unexpectedly vis-a-vis with a pretty, rosy girl, who was very much out of breath.

"I am Kate Petronel," said she. I heard what my sister-in-law said to you; and, oh, I am sorry she was rude! I can't invite you to the house, because I'm only there on sufferance; but my cousin, Mrs. Rhodes, keeps a very nice, homelike little boarding-house on Echo street. I'll show you the place, and she won't charge you anything if you tell her I sent you."

Willis Hilton bit his lip. Had his face, then, so plainly revealed the consternation of his mind?

"I do not wish to live on charity," he said.

"Oh, but just for the present?" said Kate Petronel, persuasively. "Of course, we've all got to begin the world. And I'm sure you'll like Aunt Rhodes."

So Kate led him to the corner of Echo street, and pointed out No. 58, and bade him adieu.

"I shall see you sometimes, I hope," he said, wistfully.

"I shouldn't wonder," said Kate, laughing. "I often come to Aunt Rhodes', and help her with the housemending of an evening. And I was at your grandmother's farm house once, when I was a little girl getting over the measles, and they were all kind to me. You were away at school. But I never have forgotten the sweet apples they baked for me, and the big pears I picked for myself off the tree in the corner of the garden."

And Kate Petronel ran away with her sparkling eyes.

The house on Echo street lacked the plate glass and polish of the Beckford square mansion; but old Mrs. Rhodes made him welcome, gave him the supper he so sorely needed, and showed him to a little room which was barely large enough to hold a cot bedstead, a washstand, and a six-by-nine looking glass.

And here he slept soundly all the first night, although the horse cars thundered by at ten-minute intervals, the milk wagons rattled over the stones, and the rag-and-bottle men aroused in their might at "five o'clock in the mornin'."

"My first day in New York!" said Willis Hilton to himself. "And I am determined to make it a success."

Alas, our poor hero! Need we follow him, in turn, to the sanctums of busy editors, who scarcely glanced at the literary treasures over which he had toiled so ceaselessly, to the swarming offices of the newspapers which seemed to spring up by instinct from the revolving presses, the elegant reception rooms of high-toned monthly magazines?

"An epic poem!" ejaculated Mr. Nimpie, with his pen between his teeth. "Young man, where have you been brought up? No, we don't want it. Simon, show in the next man!"

"Sketches!" said the spectacled personage behind the desk, to another "private office." "That sort of thing don't go nowadays with the reading public."

"If you would do me the favor to look at them, sir—" faltered Willis.

"Much obliged; but we'd rather not," said the spectacled gentleman. "John hand me the directory."

And this, with trifling variations, was the programme of the day.

The last place into which Willis dragged his weary limbs was the office of a thriving illustrated weekly. The editor gave a groan.

"My dear young man," said he, "you are the thirteenth person who has been here since noon to sell me an article which is perfectly unsalable. Poetry and sketches are played out. Do you see that scrap basket? Well, it has been emptied twice to-day, and is running over for the third time with just such pretty rhymes and spicy sentences as you have there. We don't even take the trouble to read 'em. But," with a softening of his voice as the haggard young man turned away, "do you really want to work?"

"If I don't work I must starve," said Willis, despairingly.

The editor looked at him with a certain pity in his eyes. Perhaps he, too, had once been a friendless boy from the country.

"Can you write a decent hand?" said he. "Here"—pushing forward a sheet of paper—"copy the leading paragraph of to-day's paper. Pretty fair—tolerable distinct. Well, we want a man to direct wrappers for us. Ten dollars a week. Not much at first, but it may lead to promotion, if you understand yourself and are not afraid to work. Will you have it? Yes or no? I've no time to dally?"

"I shall be thankful to earn a little money for myself," said Willis Hilton, fervently. "And I am most grateful for this opportunity."

And so went out the light of the rising author of Cedar Glen, the genius of the old Hilton farm.

He burned his poems and sketches in secret, and set diligently to work on the newspaper wrappers.

Kate Petronel said she thought he had done right when next she came to Mrs. Rhodes' to help with the house linen.

"But I don't see why you left the farm," said she, looking at him with those clear, hazel, soft eyes of hers over a heap of disabled table napkins.

"I wanted to be something above a farmer," said Willis.

"That's nonsense," said Kate. "A farmer's is the most independent life in the world."

"Do you think so?" said Willis.

"Of course I do." Kate responded. "A farmer needn't ask any odds of any one. And then, only to think of being always in sight of trees, and buttercups and clover blossoms! Oh, dear, I only wish I lived in the country!"

Willis Hilton said nothing more, but then and there he made up his mind. And the next autumn he came back to the farm.

"Well, Uncle Zephania," said he, "I've decided to stick to the old business."

"Eh?" said Uncle Zeph. "But you're a genius, Willis, you know."

"I'm not sure whether I am or not," said Willis, with a smile. "At all events I've determined to come back and display my abilities on the farm. My wife likes the idea, and—"

"Your wife!" said Uncle Zephania.

"Kate Petronel," explained Hilton. "We were married last week. I'm going back after her to-morrow."

"Well," said Uncle Zephania, reflectively chewing a cherry leaf, "that's the best news that I've heard yet."

So Mr. and Mrs. Hilton went to housekeeping in a modest way, and throve exceedingly, and Willis has almost forgotten how to make and like rhyme, but he is great on selecting a pair of oxen or fertilizing a field of rye.

And when Mrs. Petronel of Beckford square, hints how fond she is of the country, and how the gaieties of Newport and Saratoga pall upon her senses, Kate and Willis are deaf.

She shall never be invited here again," says Kate, screwing up her rosebud mouth in a most decided manner. And Willis only laughs, and remarks sagely:—

"My love, your will is law."

The Force of Habit.

They were coming up from Staten Island, where they had been to an entertainment. Down the bay the wind blew so hard that one of the deck-hands, who was a trifle facetious, ventured to give it as his opinion that if it didn't lull directly the boat would be blown up into Greenwood cemetery.

"By gracious, this is cold!" said one man, swinging his arms around wildly.

"Indeed it is," replied a young lady who was shivering in a seal-skin sacque. "I never felt anything like it in my life."

And then they sat down and got up and ran around, and did everything they could to keep from freezing to death until the boat landed at New York.

Then they got into an "L" train.

"I don't want to go to Staten Island any more," she said, with her teeth on a chatter.

"Neither do I," replied her chaperon; "unless I wear a bear-skin."

"That wouldn't keep you warm down there," she replied.

"I don't believe it would," said the gallant chaperon. "When a man goes to Staten Island at this time of the year, he ought to wear a hot stove to keep him warm. In summer he might wear a cold stove to keep off mosquitoes."

"Couldn't a Staten Island mosquito bite through a stove?" she asked.

"Guess he could; but if he couldn't the stove wouldn't keep off malaria; so the man would be settled anyhow. Do you feel any warmer than you did?"

"No," she replied; "I feel colder."

"So do I. Let's drop into this restaurant and warm up."

So they dropped in.

Finally the waiter came up and handed them two bills of fare.

In a few minutes the man said:

"I'm very cold. Bring me a steak and a hot cup of coffee."

Then the waiter gazed interrogatively at the damsel. She looked up at the ceiling, then at the floor. A great mental struggle was going on. Finally she raised her alabaster lids, and said in a fairy-like manner as a half-frozen person with chattering jaws could say:

"Give me a plate of ice cream."

A Quaker Dam.

New York expects to build a Quaker dam in order that it may be more liberally supplied with water. It will be news to most persons that there is such a thing as a Quaker dam. Most of us have heard of the tinker variety of the word, but it was generally supposed that the Quakers did not use one. A Quaker dam will cost $4,000,000. It is evident that this sort of a dam is the very opposite to a tinker's dam, which is the simile for all things utterly worthless. It is to be hoped that there will be no misapprehension about the phrase "a tinker's dam." There is nothing profane about the expression. In England tinkers, when soldering tinware, used to build a dam of clay around the aperture and pour the melted lead into the cavity thus formed. The hot lead drove the moisture from the clay, which readily powdered off, and thus the rustics used to say of anything quite useless that "it was not worth a tinker's dam."—Detroit Free Press.

A Good Wife.

The grandest treasure it is possible for man to possess on earth is a good wife. The purest investment he can ever make is a worthless one. Personal adornment may please the eye of the vulgar, but it will not hide a false heart. Sin may cloak itself for a brief season in the garment of hypocrisy, but sooner or later it shall come to judgment. Pure affection is a priceless jewel, the embodiment of earthly bliss. In the true union of husband and wife money should not enter into consideration. The happiest homes the world ever knew have been bought and paid for by mutual earnings after marriage. The good and true wife adorns her home and makes it a little heaven. It is the abode of a royal family, a king and queen dwell within. There are no false gods in such a household.

☞ "Can a mule-driver be a Christian?" is a recent conundrum. He might if he tried very hard, but he would have to give up driving mules.

Our Highways.

To the Publishers of the Patriot.

We have heard a good deal from various sources about expending the money raised for highways in a business way, borrowing for purposes of construction and providing for interest and sinking fund, from the amount of money usually allowed for repairs. As any one can see by consulting the records, we have been for years tending to an increase of the annual expenditures for roads with no corresponding increase of result, except it be an increase of badness of our main streets.

One of the present board of Road Commissioners, Mr. Cashman—a man whom we all will agree to be a fair judge in the premises — thinks we should allow $15,000 for repairs of highways for 1884.

Upon the present valuation of the town and the annual proportion of the taxes that has been heretofore expended on the roads, this may not be out of the way, and as the town is growing more rapidly now than at any previous period, we may reasonably conclude that with $15,000 expended this year, we shall increase our appropriation for general highway purposes at least $1000 yearly for the next ten years, so that in 1889 the appropriation will be $20,000 for highway repairs.

I understand Dr. Faxon to be in favor of constructing streets on borrowed money. Let us apply the sums laid out for general highway repairs to the creation of a fund for this purpose, and the extinguishment of the debt thereby created. To allow all the latitude that is necessary to cover machinery and appliances we will say $30,000 is borrowed the present year, $15,000 wherewith to purchase such machinery and appliances, and $15,000 to make one mile of good road, 30 feet wide, with edgestones, paved gutters and an average of one foot of crushed stone, put into place and shape with a 20-ton roller. I assume that only one mile of road could be completed this year, because the machinery and appliances cannot be made ready until half the working year has passed. On the money borrowed we should be obliged to pay interest on $30,000 for an average period of 5 months, at 4 per cent., $500, and for sinking fund to provide for a payment of the principal at the expiration of twenty-five years, or less, $600—total, $1100.

Then we have at end of year from our appropriation for general highway repairs $1100 for sinking fund and interest and $13,900 for repairs, and we have one mile of completed road. The second year we borrow $30,000 for construction and, following the general increase of taxation, appropriate $16,600 for general repairs, interest and sinking fund. At the end of the year we have three miles of completed road and have ($16,000 less interest on $60,000 one year, $2,400, sinking fund, $1,200—total, $3,600) $13,400 for general repairs. The third year we appropriate $17,000, borrow $30,000, and have at the end of the year five miles of completed road. We have put to account of interest and sinking fund, $5,400, and have had $11,600 for general repairs. The fourth year we borrow $30,000, appropriate $18,000 for repairs, interest and sinking fund. We have at the end of the year seven miles of completed street; have paid $7,200 for interest and sinking fund, and have had for repairs $10,800. The fifth year we appropriate $19,000 for interest, sinking fund and repairs, borrow $30,000 for construction; and at the end of the year we have paid out $9,000 for interest and sinking fund; have had $10,000 for repairs, and we have nine miles of streets, made in a thorough manner. These nine miles of streets would be Hancock street from Neponset bridge to School street; Washington street from Stone-temple to Point bridge; Granite street from Hancock to Copeland streets; Copeland street from Granite to Willard street; Willard street from Copeland street to Milton line, and some two miles of portions of other streets that might require such solid construction.

Here we might stop in the construction of very solid roadways. The streets named would take the greater proportion of the stone teaming, and they comprise what may be called the thoroughfares. The rest of our streets are simply for town purposes, for the domestic use of the Quincy people. As we grow in wealth and population the proportion of taxes assigned to street purposes will remain the same, but the amount would continually increase so as to give our $9,000 for interest and sinking fund and still leave an amount large enough for repairs.

The $58,700 of the annual appropriations that has not been paid out for interest and sinking fund, will undoubtedly have been spent in such a manner, that most of the streets upon which there is no heavy travel will be in as good order as can ever be required.

The limits assigned me in your issue prevent any showing of the benefit such a course of action would be to the town. X.

Two per cent. of any specified sum if appropriated annually and put to interest, will pay the principal within from twenty-four to twenty-six years, according as the interest is from six to four per cent.—Ed.

Moral and Religious.

There are some people who turn gray, but who do not grow hoary, whose faces are furrowed but not wrinkled, whose hearts are sore wounded in many places, but are not dead. There is a youth that bids defiance to age, and there is a kindness that laughs at the world's rough usage. Those are they that have returned good for evil, not having learned it as a lesson of righteousness, but because they have no evil in them to return upon others. Whom the gods love die young, and they die young because they never grow old.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 22, 1884.

PEOPLE'S COURSE. As stated in last week's PATRIOT, the financial result of this season's entertainments was a net loss of $78. Believing that the people who enjoyed so much for so small a sum, would prefer to make up the same by the puchasing of reserved seats, at twenty-five cents each, rather than have the committee make up said amount themselves or by solicitation, two fine entertainments have been arranged. If for each entertainment 350 of the reserved seats can be sold, and the balance of the house filled on ten-cent tickets, the finances will be squared up. It would certainly seem as though this would be easily done, yet up to date only a few have purchased the reserved seats. Shall not a rally be made, and John O. Holden find himself besieged by clamorous purchasers.

RESCUED. Mr. William Gragg, of West Quincy, saved on Sunday last, two young girls named Pickering, daughters of Mr. Alphonso Pickering, from drowning in a small pond near the Willard schoolhouse. When discovered by Mr. Gragg only one of the children was in sight, but when that one was rescued she entreated of him to save her sister, and upon search he discovered and saved the other. The latter was in a precarious condition when we last heard from her.

Mr. Gragg deserves much praise for this prompt and heroic act. He was obliged to swim to recover them, and the water is not very warm at this season of the year.

"MY BROTHER'S KEEPER." Those who saw the above drama enacted at the Universalist Vestry, last week Friday by the South Boston friends, were given a genuine treat. It is not common to have among us amateurs who exhibit such command of the resources of the drama. Where such even excellence was shown it would be unfair to discriminate with special approval. Suffice it to say that from Mr. Benton and his eccentric sister Betsey who purposed to preserve unsullied "the virgin fancies of her heart," much to the delight of Charles and the distress of poor Scraps, to the final vindication of the manly Allen and the business and marital partnerships that followed, every one said it was a perfect success. We hope for the pleasure of hearing our friends again.

SENSATIONAL NEWS. The Boston Globe has of late been endeavoring, it would seem, to give Quincy considerable cheap notoriety. First it was a very sensational article of over a column about the "Jesse James Gang" exaggerating and illuminating their actions; now we have another, the account of a slight disturbance at the hall of the Good Templars last Tuesday evening, which took over half a column of the valuable space of that journal. Truly, the paper that will take so much space to describe such events must be "hard up" for news.

OBITUARY. One of our aged citizens has passed away this week; Mrs. Mary Ann (Capen) Pope, widow of the late Samuel B. Pope. She has been an invalid for some time. Some twelve years ago she commenced losing her eyesight, and it gradually failed until at last sight was no more, and for the last two years she has been totally blind. She was born in Dorchester, married in 1827, and commenced housekeeping on Elm street, where she has resided to the time of her death,—over half a century.

☞ The people are reminded of the opening once more of their course of entertainments. Only a few are to be given and these will be of the best. No expense has been spared to get the most attractive talent. To-night's entertainment cannot fail to please,—it is varied and brilliant. Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Dixie, who are favorites everywhere, will appear in their very attractive musical comedies, entitled, "A Slight Mistake," and "Sweethearts." These will afford opportunity for the introduction of vocal solos and duetts, and instrumental music of a charming character and variety. Next week the Mrs. H. M. Smith Concert Company will give one of their attractive entertainments.

ANNUAL MEETING. The Evangelical Congregational Society held its annual meeting Monday evening, March 17th, at which the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year:

Clerk, James S. Baxter.
Standing Committee, W. G. Comey C. W. Carter, T. H. Wason.
Treasurer, W. G. Comey.

Committee to have charge of renting the pews, Mr. John A. Pratt. Mr. Pratt is janitor of the church building and his residence is quite near, so that he can be consulted readily.

Necktie Party.

A grand necktie party was given in the Skating Rink on Friday evening of last week, to the members of Clan McGregor and friends, by four ladies. About two hundred and fifty were present and all seemed to enjoy themselves to the utmost. Under the regime of the ladies dancing was kept up continuously all night, to the stirring strains of Grant's Quadrille Band. Miss S. A. Mann performed the duties of floor director in a most efficient and satisfactory manner, and was ably supported by her aids, Mrs. I. Walker, Mrs. A. Ross and Miss A. Young. The large party was conducted throughout in the most pleasant manner possible, and not a hitch occurred to mar the proceedings. The ladies deserve credit for their enterprise, and we hope to see them score another success in the same direction soon. D.

That Assault Case.

At a regular meeting of Hancock Lodge of Good Templars, held Tuesday evening, a disturbance occurred which we believe has been misrepresented in the Boston dailies, and made to appear as something terrible. It seems the name of a certain young man had been proposed for membership at a previous meeting, without being recommended by an investigating committee, and elected a member. James R. Qualey took exceptions and claimed the gentleman was not legally elected a member of the lodge, and an exciting argument followed. A recess was declared, and it was at this time that the alleged assault occurred. Miss Flowers commenced to abuse Mr. Qualey, and slapped his face (not as has been reported that he slapped her face), when he seized her to prevent further assault. Because of alleged rough treatment at this time Mr. Qualey was brought before the District Court by Miss Flowers for assault. The case was postponed until next Wednesday morning. F.

☞ Mr. George S. Paterson is slowly recovering from his recent fever.

☞ Read the two timely suggestions from one of our citizens in another column.

☞ Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Curtis, who have been to New Orleans and other Southern cities during the winter, are expected home to day.

☞ One of the young men initiated into Odd Fellowship last week was found to have his clothes stuffed. He had evidently been reading about the "Grand Royal Bumper Degree."

☞ Mrs. H. B. Edson has a very handsome variegated double petunia which she raised from a slip last October which has on it at the present time, eighteen blossoms and seventy-five buds.

☞ A cablegram to the family of Capt. Isaac Dickey, from that gentleman, announces his safe arrival at Hiogo, Japan, from Philadelphia, after a passage of one hundred and sixty days.

☞ The Temple of Honor will give an entertainment to consist of choice character delineations at Bent's Hall, on Wednesday evening next. For full particulars see notice in our columns to-day.

☞ The total number initiated into the new Mt. Wollaston Lodge of Odd Fellows is ninety-four. All future applicants will be received in regular form. The lodge now numbers one hundred and eighteen.

☞ Captain Hiram Phillips has presented us with a small dish which he picked up in his diving operations while saving cargo from the wreck of the City of Columbus. He will please accept our thanks for this souvenir of this sad and melancholy shipwreck.

☞ Thomas McGunigle, who went to Boston, several days ago, had not returned up to yesterday morning, and his family feel somewhat alarmed about him. He was seen in a saloon on Kneeland street on Monday night.

☞ John Q. A. Field, Esq., has been appointed this week by the Selectmen, a Road Commissioner, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of John Q. Adams, Esq. Mr. Field is a very able man, and will make an efficient member of the board.

☞ Mr. Edward G. Chapin, a native of Quincy, and a son of Eliphalet Chapin, for many years a resident of Quincy Point, is enjoying a visit among relatives and friends in this vicinity. He has been West for three years and has at the present time a large sheep ranch in Wyoming territory. He intends to return West in a few weeks.

☞ The calico party at the skating rink on Wednesday evening proved to be a grand success. The skaters all wore something in the calico line. The orange race was an interesting feature of the evening, and was won by Mr. E. B. Glover, who very gallantly distributed his winnings—the oranges—among the ladies.

☞ We have received from Mrs. Isaac M. Holt a handsome cutting filled with sweet buds from one of the trees in her orange grove in Florida. We believe that it was the intention of Mr. and Mrs. Holt to leave Florida about this time for home, but we think two or three weeks later would make the change much pleasanter.

☞ The masquerade ball at the Weymouth Town Hall, under the auspices of Knights of Pythias, on Friday evening of last week, was very much enjoyed by a large party. A number of young gentlemen from this town participated in the pleasures of the ball. The music was furnished by Brown's brigade band. An excellent collation was served during the evening.

Vile Literature.

Editors of the Patriot:—

It seems to be a fact that large numbers of our children are reading more or less extensively the most harmful and vicious of literature. Where do they get it? Somewhere, surely. Is there any one in this town engaged in the vile business of dispensing to our children the infamous Five Cent Libraries, Dime Novels, the Boys of New York, and other such stuff? If so, I protest. I object to any one selling this pernicious literature to my child, and for very much the same reason that I object to any one selling intoxicating liquors to him. Our town has twice said very emphatically that no person within her borders shall corrupt, and poison, and destroy our children by selling them strong drink, and there certainly should be as decided a protest against corrupting and poisoning their minds by this cursed literature, full of blood, and thunder, and daggers, and pistols, and all the paraphernalia of hell, which we are beginning to find out will surely accomplish their ruin.

The writer has never seen any of this poison on sale here (not looking sharply, probably), but if there are those engaged in this disreputable business let them be warned to keep their hands off of our children. It can readily be understood how the boys might be tempted to read such trash, when put in their way, even though our town library is overflowing with excellent reading adapted to interest, instruct and improve them, but how any one with the semblance of decency can deal it out to them, that thereby he may gain a little money, is beyond conception. Let the parents and guardians of our children rise up and demand that this sale be stopped.

COMMERCIAL FERTILIZERS. Commercial fertilizers have come into such general use among our farmers, that arguments in their favor are hardly necessary. Nearly all farmers use some fertilizer now on their farms, even if they have barn-yard manure in abundance. There are now many kinds in the market, but among our best farmers, the preference seems to be decidedly in favor of Bradley's Super-phosphate, which they say is always uniform in quality and condition, and hence always reliable.

Everybody should read Dr. John Lounsbury's letter, in another column.

Quincy Point Items.

MINSTRELS.

The Quincy Point Minstrel Troupe gave their second entertainment at Hall's Opera House, on Thursday evening, to a large and enthusiastic audience. The troupe improves with practice, and on the 20th inst. carried out a well arranged programme with great success.

Solos by Messrs. A. L. Mead, F. A. Alden and F. G. Mead are deserving of special mention, also the solo by Master P. B. Mead, the youngest member of the company, who sang "My dear Savannah Home."

The song, "Going Home to Clo," by a quartette, was well rendered. Prof. J. F. Harlow, Jr., presided at the piano and was all that could be desired.

The club swinging by F. A. Burrell was, as before, excellent, and the rounds of applause which followed brought him forth a second time, much to the delight of all present.

The whole was concluded by the laughable sketch of "Jenkins' Quarrelsome Servants." The jokes of the end men contained some good local hits, which could be appreciated by all.

We understand that the third and last entertainment will be given on Fast night.

PERSONAL.

Deacon D. Howard Bills spent last week in West Townsend, where he has not been for forty-two years, and had a most enjoyable time visiting his many friends.

Miss Anna Starbuck is at home during the vacation of Sandwich schools, where she has been engaged in teaching the past three months.

Miss Jennie LeVan, of Middleport, N. Y., is visiting friends in the place.

THIS AND THAT.

The Ladies' Aid Society appointed a sociable for Wednesday evening, but on account of the unpleasant weather few were present, and after a little music the party broke up. The organ and piano duet by the Misses Penny, and piano and violin duet by Miss L. Penny and Mr. William Wight were listened to with pleasure.

Gentle Spring was ushered in on Thursday by a cold rainstorm, which changed later in the day to a snowstorm lasting until sometime during the night. Many were comforting themselves that as March came in like a lion it would go out like a lamb. It has carried out the lion part to perfection, and occupied the lion share of the month and has but a short time left in which to redeem itself.

The appearance of the hand organ is the only indication thus far that Spring is at hand.

W. S. A.

The Washington School Association will hold a meeting on Thursday evening next at 7.30 o'clock. All graduates of the Washington School are cordially invited to attend and join the association. There will be a meeting of the executive committee connected with the same this evening at the house of Ella M. Freeman. E. M. F.

Two Suggestions.

The town of Quincy ought to take the old cemetery and turn it into a park. We already own the land, the trees are already grown, the site is central and it is just the place we need. On the Fourth of July, Decoration Day, and other holidays, it is used by people from all parts of the town. If the people had such a place where they could go on summer evenings, we should not need a couple of policemen to keep the sidewalks clear around the Post Office and in the Square. The expense of the removal of the contents of such graves as are now distinguishable, would be very slight. Persons who might wish to carry away the remains of relatives could be allowed to do so. After a certain time the town could complete the work, which should be conducted with becoming respect and reverence as has been often done in other places. The owners of tombs do not own the ground, but could be paid for the material, or could be paid for moving it. This suggestion is made now in order to give the town time to think about it before the next year's town meeting.

The town ought to have a monument erected to John Hancock, on the triangular plot of ground just north of the Unitarian Church. A simple granite shaft, with a suitable inscription, would be sufficient. A statue would be better. John Hancock's name is better known throughout the country than that of any other inhabitant of the town, and it seems as if Quincy ought to show some degree of pride in the matter. Perhaps if the youth of our time could see every day some proof that courage and patriotism are still valued, they would be less likely to go astray. H. A. K.

A Church for Atlantic.

From notices appearing in the PATRIOT, your readers will know that an effort is being made to erect a church building in Atlantic. The need for this is imperative. For some years a mission has been prosecuted successfully. The meetings have been held in the schoolhouse, but cannot be continued there much longer, hence the necessity of the erection of a building for the Sunday-school and preaching services, and at a public meeting, it was resolved to erect a Congregational chapel forthwith.

Rev. R. F. Gordon has conducted the services for about two years, during which period the attendance at the various services has been very encouraging, and is steadily increasing. A building such as is proposed, is greatly required in Atlantic, as a social, moral, intellectual and religious centre for the people. A considerable sum has been raised on the spot, but more money is required, and an appeal is hereby made to the people of Quincy, generally, for help in this good work. George L. Gill, Esq., Town Clerk, has kindly consented to receive any subscriptions that may be given him. Any amount will be welcome, and will help. The building must be commenced in a few weeks, and any friends who are disposed to give, please do so promptly, a double kindness being thus conferred. R.

District Court, Quincy.

The following cases have been before the District Court this week:—

John Rowney, Jr., of Weymouth, for larceny of a rooster. Found guilty and fined $10 and costs.

Henry M. Harding, of Weymouth, for being drunk, was fined $1 and costs.

Robert McAuliff, 2d, of Randolph, for an assault on John F. Lee. Continued to May 1st.

Jerald M. Barrett, of Randolph, for cruelty to a horse, was fined $10 and costs.

John Kilrain and William Grady, of Quincy, for being drunk. Fined each $1 and costs.

James R. Qualey, of Quincy, for an assault. Continued till Wednesday next.

Unpaid Bounties.

As considerable has been said and written of late, concerning the act to authorize the town of Quincy to pay certain bounties, recently passed by the Legislature, and to be submitted to the voters at a meeting to be held in the morning of Monday, March twenty-fourth, and desiring that the citizens of the town may understand the true facts, which seem to have been in some way over-looked, in the report of a portion of the committee chosen to consider the articles in the town warrant; permit us to present to your candid consideration, the following testimony, which was submitted to a sub-committee of the general committee on the town warrant, on March tenth.

Mr. Pattee in presenting the case, stated that the act passed by the Legislature only applied to about nineteen men, who re-enlisted in the quota of the town of Quincy, between Dec. 1, 1863, and April 20, 1864, and served until the close of the war, or were honorably discharged. During 1861 and 1862, certain citizens from the town of Quincy enlisted in the army and bravely went to the front. Their time expired between December, 1863, and April, 1864. In the Fall of 1863, he thought in October, there was a call upon the town for a quota, and the town through their selectmen, who were Ebenezer Adams, Daniel Baxter and Edmund B. Taylor, offered all who would enlist, a bounty of $125 each; and if you will turn to the files of the QUINCY PATRIOT of about this date, you will find most urgent calls for men and promises of bounty.

There were other calls for men in February and March, 1864. Many men enlisted during the fall and winter of 1863-4, in the quota of said town, and being here at the time of their enlistment received their bounty of $125. The men who had gallantly served their country from 1861 and 1862, up to that time, and whose time was about expiring, they then being in the field, learning that the town of Quincy was offering a bounty of $125 to each soldier who re-enlisted in the quota of that town; and some of them seeing a letter written at the request of the selectmen, by Mr. Abercrombie, who was then the town treasurer, urging the men in the field to re-enlist in the quota of Quincy, and stating that the town would do as well by them, as any other town, re-enlisted. Many of them did not return home until the close of the war, and when they did, which was in 1865 they went to the selectmen for their bounty, but were told it could not be paid to them as the court had decided, that towns had no right to raise money for bounties without a special act of the Legislature; consequently they did not get any.

A few men did come home on a furlough in 1864, and had some conversation with the selectmen, who told them that they were out of money just at that time, but would put it in the bank for them; but they never did. In the warrant for a town meeting held April 20, 1864, the following articles appeared: Article 2d, "To see what sum of money the town will raise by taxation to defray the expense of recruiting under the calls of the President of the United States, dated October 17, 1863, and March 14, 1864."

Under this article, the following vote was passed: "That the sum of $1200 be raised by taxation for reimbursing to the source from which it was procured the amount that has already been expended, and also for what further expense may be incurred for recruiting purposes under the calls of the President of the United States for men, dated October 17, 1863, and March 14, 1864."

Article 3d, "To see what sums of money the town will raise by taxation, or otherwise, for the purpose of procuring its proportion of the quota of volunteers, which may be called for under any call of the President of the United States from March 15th, 1864, to March 1st, 1865." Under this article the following was passed: "That the selectmen be authorized to offer $125 each, for all recruits that may be needed from this town under each and every call that may be made by the President of the United States from this date to March 1st, 1865." In 1866 the town passed a vote "to instruct the town treasurer to pay all soldiers belonging to the town who have received no bounty from the town, $125."

These facts were verified by several witnesses present. Mr. Ebenezer Adams testified that the town did, at that time, through the selectmen, offer bounties of $125 to all who would enlist; that those here in town did receive their money; that those who re-enlisted in the field did not: that he requested Mr. Abercrombie to write a letter to the men in the field, asking them to re-enlist in the quota of the town and to offer them as much bounty as other towns; and that he considered that the town was morally bound to pay those men now. The above statements were corroborated by Mr. Washington M. French who was one of the recruiting officers at that time, and several others.

We hope that the town will see fit to perform its moral obligations which it owes to those men who left their homes and families to suffer the privations and hardships of the battle-field; men who should be praised for their valiant deeds rather than be branded by opprobrious epithets. We hope you will do that which has been left undone too long already; a duty which the town owes to those who went forth bravely to battle, leaving wife, mother and children, and a happy home, to suffer the hardships of the war, some never to return, others to come back maimed, wounded and broken down in health, and this done for the honor of this town and country. Can the town be so ungrateful at this late day, as to refuse these few soldiers, what certainly morally belongs to them. JUSTICE.

At a regular meeting of Paul Revere Post, held Thursday evening, March 20th, the foregoing article was unanimously endorsed.

W. P. MARTIN, Commander.
J. D. WILLIAMS, Adjt.

Road Commissioners.

On page 84 of the last Town Report it says the "actual expenditure on highway repairs for the year is $10,247.28." By turning to the pages 82 and 83, it is plain to see that incidental to the above amount, are various items, hay, grain, sprinkling streets, drain pipe and shoeing horses; these items, with a few others, foot up over $2000. Add this $1310.39, salary of the Superintendent, and deduct the same from the sum total, and you have less than $7000 actually put out on the roads. It will be easily seen that the salary is eighteen per cent. of the amount actually spent on roads. I claim that if the town of Quincy expended thirty to forty thousand dollars annually on the roads, we should need an experienced superintendent, but with only from seven to ten thousand, we cannot afford a large salaried superintendent.

I believe after carefully looking into the subject, that it is far better for the town to do away with the Road Commissioners and the superintendent, and put the streets again into the hands of the Selectmen, for they are as capable of taking care of that business, and will, I believe, give just as good satisfaction in that line of duty as they certainly have in the other branches under their charge. I bring this important subject to the notice of the tax-payers and hope all will carefully consider it, and then vote as they decide best at the adjourned meeting.

A Town Park.

Quincy has now an opportunity to confer a lasting benefit on its citizens which but few towns has ever had. With the rapid growth of population, soon every available spot for out-of-door sports and holiday recreations, will be occupied.

Shall she lose this only chance which so temptingly offers? The old muster fields, if they could be had, have neither the natural advantages nor the location the town wants. A beautiful shore, where land and water meet, skirted by a belt of natural forest, make the proposed site pre-eminently desirable. The facilities for travel by steam, elevated and horse railroads, in the near future, will bring the different sections of the town much nearer than now. Shall we deny to our children when a few years hence Quincy shall number in population three-score thousand; shall we deny to them then, these grounds, which, with the increase of wealth they will delight to improve and ornament if we act wisely now?

Let our laboring population, who need for their families a public park like this, see to it that they protect themselves while they may. S.

We have received the following communication, which will be found interesting to market gardeners:

SUNDERLAND, MASS., Dec. 6, '83.

We have used Bradley's Superphosphate for the last three years in growing market produce, and have been led to esteem it more and more each year; in fact, would not expect to succeed without it. We have also used it side by side with other fertilizers, with marked results in its favor. We intend in future to use no other.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE UPON THE Remaining Articles of Warrant.

The Committee of the town to whom were referred the articles of the warrant not disposed of at the annual town meeting held March 8, 1884, have carefully considered each and all of the remaining articles, and submit herewith to the town the action deemed by them most advisable for the town to take thereon, together with a form of vote suitable in each case for carrying out their recommendation.

ART. 4. To act upon the report of the Auditors of Accounts, Selectmen, School Committee, Road Commissioners, Trustees of Crane Public Library, Adams Academy, and Managers of Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

The committee to which was referred the auditors' report, have to report that it appears therefrom that the Selectmen, the Engineers of the Fire Department and the Road Commissioners have severally exceeded the sums appropriated by the town.

In the case of the Selectmen an explanation of this fact is found in their report, on page 7 of the Town Book, and appears to be satisfactory. The excess ($222.82) was incurred in the settlement of a law-suit of long standing against the town, which involved the payment of $350.

In the case of the Engineers and Road Commissioners no explanation is offered. The Engineers appear to have spent $1029.16, or 17 per cent. over the amount appropriated; while the Road Commissioners on several accounts have spent $1302.44, or 8.4 per cent. more than the amounts appropriated on those accounts. A committee of the town reported in 1878 (Town Book, p. 92) that the entire town debt of over $100,000 was due to "the loose practice of not making the appropriations for the ordinary expenses of each year cover them." The town would long since have been out of debt had town officers kept strictly within their appropriations. The ninth by-law was framed to remedy this evil, and by it all town officers are forbidden to incur any expenses in excess of amounts specifically appropriated, without the sanction of the inhabitants of the town first had and obtained.

The committee recommend the following:

VOTE, The course of the Engineers of the Fire Department and the Road Commissioners in exceeding their appropriations during the past year is disapproved. The attention of the officers composing those boards is called to Article 9 of the Town by-laws, and they are instructed hereafter to conform thereto.

VOTE, The sum of $500 is hereby appropriated to be expended under direction of the Selectmen in necessary repairs to the Town Hall, and a further sum of $500 is also appropriated to be similarly expended in grading, fencing, &c., the grounds around the Almshouse.

The committee to which was referred the report of the Trustees of the Public Library, report that the sum of $2500 should be appropriated for the regular expenses of said library, and a further sum of $350 for the purposes of introducing water, grading and caring for grounds; the same to be expended by the Trustees.

VOTE, So much of the Selectmen's report as relates to the town debt is referred to a committee consisting of the Town Treasurer and the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund; and the Treasurer is authorized, under the instructions of said committee, to issue new notes of the town to meet outstanding notes now due.

ART. 5. To determine the method of repairing the highways during the ensuing year.

VOTE, Article 5 is laid upon the table to await the action of the Town on Article 40 of the warrant.

ART. 6. To determine how the town land shall be improved during the ensuing year.

VOTE, The Overseers of the Poor shall direct the improvement of the town lands for the ensuing year.

ART. 7. To see if the town will sell their land, or any part thereof, on Adams Street, known as the Newcomb lot, and authorize the Selectmen to execute a deed for the same.

VOTE, The Selectmen are hereby authorized to sell land on Adams street, known as the "Newcomb lot," or any part thereof, and the proceeds, after deducting therefrom the necessary expenses of the sale, shall be paid over to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, who shall receipt therefor, and forthwith apply the same to the purposes of said fund.

ART. 8. To revise the Jury List.

VOTE, The list of jurors as prepared by the Selectmen is hereby accepted.

ART. 9. To hear and act upon the report of the Road Commissioners upon guide-boards.

VOTE, The report of the Road Commissioners on guide-boards is hereby accepted.

ART. 10. To see if the town will appropriate the sum of two hundred dollars for repairing and decorating soldiers' graves, the same to be expended under the direction of Post 88 of the Grand Army of the Republic.

VOTE, The sum of $200 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of Post 88 of the Grand Army of the Republic in procuring and planting shade trees upon such public ways of the Town as the Post may select, the same to be cherished and preserved as monuments erected in commemoration of the Soldiers of Quincy, who died in the service of their country in the war of the rebellion; and the Post shall designate in each case the individual to whose memory each tree is peculiarly dedicated, and shall affix to it his name, rank, regiment, place of death or name of battle in which he fell, upon a suitable tablet, and they shall make a careful record of each tree so planted, with its location and dedication, and return the same to the Clerk of the Town, who shall enter the same in full upon the Town Records.

ART. 11. To see if the town will grant the free use of the Town Hall for free lectures, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The Selectmen shall grant the free use of the Town Hall, whenever it is requested in writing by not less than two citizens of the town, for a free lecture on any scientific, literary or moral topic, subject to such regulations as they may deem expedient, and two hundred dollars is appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 12. To see if the town will instruct the Selectmen to appoint special police officers to enforce all laws bearing upon the sale of intoxicating liquors, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The Selectmen are instructed to appoint special officers to enforce all laws bearing on the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town, and $500 is appropriated for that purpose.

ART. 13. To see if the town will accept two water fountains from Henry H. Faxon, to be placed in the vicinity of the town pump and Wollaston depot, and appropriate money to erect same and furnish water supply.

VOTE, The inhabitants of Quincy accept with gratitude the public-spirited profer of their fellow-townsman, Henry H. Faxon, of two water fountains, and hereby return to him their cordial thanks for the gift, and they direct that they be erected at suitable spots, to be designated by the donor, and the sum of four hundred dollars is hereby appropriated to defray the necessary expense of setting them up and supplying them with water.

ART. 14. To see if the town will elect three Park Commissioners under the act of Legislature approved March 9, 1882.

VOTE, A committee of three shall be appointed by the Moderator to nominate for the consideration of this meeting three persons, who, or such others as the town may substitute for them, shall be a Board of Park Commissioners. The Commissioners thus chosen shall hold their offices respectively, as the town shall designate, for one, two and three years, from the day of the annual town meeting of this year.

VOTE, A member of the Board of Park Commissioners shall be hereafter chosen by ballot at each annual town meeting, to serve for a term of three years.

VOTE, In case of a vacancy occurring in the said Board of Park Commissioners, said vacancy may be filled by the other members of said Board and the Selectmen, voting by joint ballot, and the person so chosen shall serve until the next annual town meeting.

ART. 15. To see if the town will instruct the Park Commissioners to take a portion of the land left by the late Ebenezer Woodward to the town, and will appropriate money to pay for the same.

VOTE, The Park Commissioners are hereby instructed to take, under the provisions of Chapter 70 of the Acts of 1882, for the purpose of locating a park thereon, that portion of the land left to the town by the will of the late Ebenezer Woodward, lying North of Black's creek and brook, so called, and depicted in green on a plan prepared by Whitman & Breck, and appended to the report of the Merrymount Park Association of February, 1882.

VOTE, The sum of eighteen thousand dollars ($18,000) is hereby appropriated to defray the cost of acquiring said park land, and of fencing and improving the same during the present year, and that the Town Treasurer be authorized and instructed to borrow the same when in writing requested so to do by the Park Commissioners. And the Treasurer is further directed in borrowing said money to give therefor the notes of the town, to be designated in his annual reports as Park Loan Notes. Said notes shall be for sums of not over five thousand dollars ($5,000) each, and shall run for periods of not less than four or more than ten years, as the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund shall direct. And the payment of said notes at maturity shall be provided for by annual appropriations of not less than one thousand dollars ($1,000) to the sinking fund.

VOTE, The Park Commissioners are instructed to prepare a system of rules and regulations for the use and enjoyment of said park by all the people of Quincy, and shall submit the same to the town for approval at the next annual meeting.

ART. 16. To see what action, if any, the town will take in reference to laying out a park under the act approved March 9, 1882, and appropriate money therefor.

Article 16 is indefinitely postponed.

ART. 17. To see if the town will, by its vote or otherwise, ask the Legislature to extend to women who are citizens the right to hold town offices and to vote in town affairs on the same terms as male citizens.

VOTE, Article 17 is indefinitely postponed.

ART. 18. To see if the town will amend article 9 of the by-laws for the government of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery, by adding to the first clause thereof the words "or to persons entitled to burial privileges in the old burial ground," or make other amendments as may serve to extend the right to buy and [illegible] Mount Wollaston Cemetery to descendants of owners of tombs in the old cemetery.

VOTE, Article 9 of the by-laws for the government of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery is hereby amended, so that the first clause thereof shall read as follows, viz: "No lots shall be sold except to actual residents of the town, or to the proprietors of tombs in the old cemetery, who may purchase one lot for each tomb, and no more."

ART. 19. To see if the town will pay a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to certain soldiers who served during the late war as part of the quota of the town of Quincy, and have never received any bounty from the town, and appropriate a sum of money therefor.

The committee have to report that a public hearing was given on this article, and a statement was made of the facts involved. Under the act of the Legislature recently passed the amount to be appropriated for bounties to certain soldiers of the late war cannot exceed $2500, and for those bounties there are not as yet known to be above twenty applicants. Without in any way going into the merits of individual cases among these applicants, the committee is unable to recommend the town to pass the vote submitted to it. It would appear to indirectly reopen the whole question of bounties, paid, not paid, or promised, twenty years ago. In the course of the investigation the committee was surprised to find that the town had no vouchers or pay-rolls showing what bounties had been paid, or to whom. There is not, as far as can be learned, a scratch of the pen on file indicating that the town ever paid a dollar of bounty to any individual soldier. Yet it is supposed that over $100,000 was thus paid out. Under these circumstances nothing but the lapse of time can ever quiet these claims. If they are once reopened it is not easy to see where they will stop. The only evidence in any case will be the statement of each claimant that a bounty was promised to him but never paid. The officers of the town during the war are many of them dead; nor can those yet living recall particular events so long gone by. While, therefore, cases of individual hardship may be incurred by treating these claims as now barred by time, just as revolutionary claims are barred by time, yet your committee think it would be wiser to adopt this course than, twenty years after the event, to open the way to what may prove a series of similar claims in which from the utter absence of evidence it would be impossible to either prevent fraud or to do justice. Your committee is further induced to recommend this disposition of the matter in view of the unprecedented liberality which Congress is evincing in dealing with all claims of soldiers whether for pension or bounties, arising out of the late war.

[From the foregoing portion of the report Messrs. Hodges, Field, Cahill, Malone, Eaton, Spear, Duggan and Hall of the committee dissent. The remainder of the report and the accompanying form of votes were unanimously agreed to.]

Should, however, the town take a different view of the question, and vote to pay said claims, your committee submit the following:

VOTE, The sum of $2500 is hereby appropriated to payment of soldiers' bounties under the recent vote of the town; and the Selectmen are instructed to secure the services of the Hon. George White, or if his services cannot be obtained those of some other suitable person, not a resident of the town, to act as a commissioner to receive, audit, and approve or reject any claims for bounties which may be made under the act of Legislature recently passed.

VOTE, In each case where the commissioner aforesaid shall certify in writing that he is satisfied from the evidence submitted to him, and verified on oath, that the claimant, being a veteran or soldier then serving on an enlistment of not less than two years, re-enlisted in the quota of Quincy, between the dates specified in the act, and upon the promise of receiving a bounty of $125 from the town, which bounty for any reason was not paid, in such case the Selectmen may pay to the soldier so certified to, the whole, or any such portion of said sum of $125 which shall appear to be due him, taking therefore a discharge in full for all war services rendered which shall be placed on file among the vouchers of the town.

MINORITY REPORT.

The undersigned, being a minority of the committee appointed to consider the various articles in the town warrant, beg leave respectfully to dissent from the recommendation of the majority of that committee, that the town should not pass a vote to pay a bounty of $125 to certain soldiers who served during the late war as part of the quota of the town of Quincy and have never received any bounty from the town, and to present their reasons.

There is no doubt but what the selectmen did offer, during the period referred to in the act of the Legislature recently passed, a bounty of $125 to these men if they would re-enlist, and that further, they were urgently requested to enlist in the quota of Quincy by the selectmen and by the town treasurer, Mr. Abercrombie, who wrote a letter to the men in the field, at the request of the selectmen, offering them as much bounty as other towns were offering.

We fail to see any just reason why these men who were in the field when they re-enlisted should be debarred from receiving the same amount as those who enlisted here in town, at that time.

It seems to us to be a claim which the town cannot refuse to pay without injustice to itself.

The majority of your committee say that it would appear to indirectly reopen the whole question of bounties paid, not paid, or promised, twenty years ago. But how so, this act only authorizes the town to pay a certain class of men, i. e., those who re-enlisted between the first day of December, 1863, and the twentieth day of April, 1864, in the quota of said town, and served until the close of the late war, or were honorably discharged during said period and have never received any bounty from the town.

Now the number can be definitely ascertained by the returns at the State House, and on examination it proves to be less than twenty, and furthermore the act only authorizes an appropriation of $2500, so it is only possible that twenty men could come under the provisions of this act. In order that any others should be paid it would be necessary that another act should be obtained from the Legislature, and if any such should be attempted, it would be time then to object to its passage.

While the claim of this particular lot of men has been known for several years to exist, yet no mention has been made of any others, and it is fair to presume that there are none.

The various boards of selectmen of the town during the period of the war must have been negligent if they took no vouchers for the payment of bounties, for we find in the Auditors' report for those years that large sums of money were paid for bounties and the auditors certify that they found the vouchers correct each year.

Let us look and see who the selectmen were from 1861 to 1865. 1861, Daniel Baxter, Ebenezer Adams and Noah Cummings; 1862, Ebenezer Adams, Noah Cummings and Albert Thayer; 1863, Ebenezer Adams, Daniel Baxter and Edmund B. Taylor; 1864, Ebenezer Adams, Edmund B. Taylor and Ensign S. Fellows; also who the auditors were during this period: 1861, John Chamberlain, Jonathan Jameson, G. W. B. Taylor, Jesse P. Newcomb, Jr., William Field and George L. Gill; 1862, John Chamberlain, Edwin Marsh, E. S. Fellows, C. H. Hardwick and Lorenzo Johnson; 1863, Edward Turner, Albert Thayer, George H. Cummings, Noah Cummings and Charles R. Mitchell; 1864, George H. Arnold, E. W. Underwood, Peter W. Newcomb, Charles A. Spear and Jacob F. Eaton. We cannot believe that such men as these permitted the payment of thousands of dollars without any vouchers.

Believing that this is an [illegible] and just debt which the town owes, and that the act now under consideration cannot open any door to the payment of any large sum of money for bounties, we recommend the passage of the article inserted in the warrant for the special town meeting, to be held on the morning of March 24th.

ART. 20. To see whether the town will authorize and direct the Selectmen to pay back to the representatives or heirs of James Huckins, late of Quincy, deceased, the double taxes that have been paid on land not belonging to his estate, the taxes thereon having been once taxed to and paid by the real owners of the land.

The Committee have to report that they met Messrs. Child and Butler, the counsel of the representatives of the late James Huckins, and heard their statement in reference to the question to which this article of the warrant relates. It appears that in 1868 James Huckins owned 79 acres of land at Squantum. He that year sold one parcel of 5 acres. In 1869 he sold another parcel of 3 1-3 acres. Nevertheless, the Assessors went on until the last year (1883) taxing him for 79 acres, although the taxes on the 8 1-3 acres he had sold were also assessed to the grantees thereof, and by them paid. The petition of the Huckins heirs is to have the taxes since 1868 on the land sold refunded to them, as having been paid under mutual mistake. It is not suggested that a suit at law for such taxes could be maintained against the town. The amount of the claim is $591.57.

The Committee are unable to report favorably on this claim. It is by no means clear that the town would be legally authorized to appropriate money to pay a claim which it is not pretended could be enforced in the Courts; neither is it at all certain that double taxes were paid. The Assessors do not undertake in every case to exactly specify the measurement of land taxed. It is so many acres, more or less; and the omission to change the number of acres may be a mere oversight not affecting the gross valuation. Beyond this, however, the Committee do not think it advisable to open questions of valuation and taxes which the law has closed. If such are to be opened, it is certainly incumbent on claimants to show that the mistake, and consequent injustice, were due to no negligence of their own. The statute prescribes the annual returns and statements which all tax-payers are to make. If they neglect to make such returns, the statute further provides a remedy, specifying the time within which it can be resorted to. If the tax-payer neither makes the statement nor applies for his remedy within the time specified, it seems but reasonable that he should accept the consequences of his own neglect. Supposing the case reversed, and that the town discovered that 71 acres only had been taxed for 16 years, the property really containing 80 acres, would the owner for a moment entertain a proposition to pay the accumulated taxes of the 9 omitted acres during those 16 years when they were not assessed? For a town to adopt any other rule in regard to past valuations than that here laid down would manifestly open the door to an infinite number of claims which could not be decided in Court, in the usual way, and which a town meeting is the most ill adapted conceivable tribunal to pass upon. The Committee, therefore, recommend the following

VOTE, Article 20 is indefinitely postponed.

ART. 21. To see if the town will appoint a committee, and authorize it, in connection with committees appointed by the other towns constituting the original town of Braintree, to have the records of Braintree, from 1640 to 1793, printed and indexed, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, A committee of three persons, to be nominated by the Moderator, is hereby appointed, and they are directed to confer with any committees which may be appointed by the towns of Braintree, Randolph or Holbrook, in regard to printing and indexing the town records of Braintree from the year 1640 to the year 1793, and to contract therefor; and they are further authorized to use the copy of said records, now the property of this town, to print from.

ART. 22. To see if the town will enlarge the Coddington Schoolhouse, or otherwise provide additional school accommodations, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The School Committee are authorized to provide such additional school accommodations at the Coddington School as they may deem necessary at a cost not exceeding three thousand dollars, and the sum of three thousand dollars or so much thereof as may be required is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

ART. 23. To see if the town will vote to change the present contract with the Quincy Water Company, in that which relates to the number of hydrants and the money to be paid for the same, so that the agreement shall be that the Quincy Water Company shall furnish, set, maintain and supply with water hydrants wherever desired by the town on its line of pipe, the town to pay for the same thirty-five (35) dollars each per annum.

VOTE, The committee appointed at the adjourned town meeting of July 10, 1883, to contract with the Quincy Water Company is hereby authorized and instructed to change the contract with that company so that it shall provide that the said Quincy Water Company shall furnish, set, maintain and supply with water, hydrants of such pattern and capacity as the Board of Engineers may designate, wherever desired by the town on its line of pipe, the town to pay thirty-five ($35) dollars per annum for each hydrant so furnished, provided the same shall be always supplied with an adequate pressure of water for efficient fire service.

ART. 24. To see if the town will sell the Tiger Engine.

VOTE, The Engineers of the Fire Department are authorized to sell the Tiger Engine at public or private sale as they may deem most advisable and thereupon pay over to the Town Treasurer the net amount of the proceeds thereof.

ART. 25. To see if the town will cause the erection of additional fire alarm boxes, the same to be located under the directions of the Board of Engineers, and appropriate the sum of five hundred dollars therefor.

VOTE, The Engineers are authorized to cause to be erected additional fire alarm boxes at points to be designated by them, and five hundred dollars or such part thereof as may be required is appropriated to pay therefor.

ART. 26. To see if the town will purchase fifteen hundred feet of hose, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The Engineers are authorized to purchase fifteen hundred feet of hose, for the use of the fire department and the sum of thirteen hundred dollars or such part thereof as may be required is appropriated to pay therefor.

ART. 27. To see if the town will cause a steam whistle to be placed at the pumping station of the Quincy water works.

VOTE, The Engineers of the Fire Department are hereby authorized to purchase a steam whistle and "tapper" to be placed at the pumping station of the Quincy Water Company and connected with the fire alarm telegraph, provided suitable arrangements can be made with the Water Company for connecting the same, sounding the alarms and any other conditions they may think necessary, and also provided that the whole, when completed and in working order, shall not exceed in cost $250, and that sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

ART. 28. To see if the town will authorize the Board of Engineers to reorganize the fire department by selling any portion of the present apparatus and purchasing new, if, in their opinion, they find that the proposed hydrant service will warrant them in so doing, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The Board of Engineers and the Board of Selectmen, acting as a joint commission, are hereby empowered to re-organize the fire department in such manner and at such times, having due regard to the hydrant water service, as the safety and best interests of the town may, in their judgment, demand, and in pursuance of such plan to sell, exchange or replace any part of the present apparatus.

ART. 29. To see if the town will place a fire alarm box on some building at a point near the present location of the steam fire pump.

VOTE, The matter of article twenty-nine is hereby referred to the Board of Engineers.

ART. 30. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Quincy Avenue to South Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Quincy avenue to South street is hereby accepted, and the sum of three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 31. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way, being an extension of Quarry Street, westerly to Common Street, and appropriate money therefor.

ART. 34. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners widening Copeland Street near the corner of Willard Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTE, The report of the Road Commissioners widening Copeland street near the corner of Willard street is hereby accepted and the sum of one hundred dollars is appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

VOTE, The further consideration of Article thirty-eight is indefinitely postponed.

ART. 39. To see if the town will discontinue that portion of Valley Street leading from Coddington Street to its junction with Valley Street, as relocated March, 1882, and transfer the same to the Managers of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

VOTE, That portion of Valley street leading from Coddington street to its junction with Valley street as it runs as relocated March, 1882, is hereby discontinued, and the released location is transferred to the Managers of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery and made a part of that burial ground.

ART. 40. To see if the town will revoke the vote whereby it accepted the provisions of CHAP. 158 of the Acts of the year 1871, and abolish the Road Commissioners.

VOTE, The acceptance by the Inhabitants of Quincy of the provisions of chapter one hundred and fifty-eight of the Statutes of the year eighteen hundred and seventy-one is hereby revoked and the vote of the Town accepting the same is hereby rescinded and the Board of Road Commissioners is abolished.

MINORITY REPORT.

The undersigned members of the committee dissent from the recommendation of the majority, and submit the following reasons therefor:

Prior to the enactment of the statute in question the construction and maintenance of town roads were entrusted to the Selectmen of the several towns. As a rule, these officers are elected annually, the membership of each board changing in whole or in part every year. The result of this is that the work of road-building and road-repairing is carried on in an irregular, capricious fashion, as the whims or interests of the Selectmen directed, and without any intelligent and continuous plan looking to a permanent, economical and advantageous system of highways.

Again, selectmen have various public duties to perform, and the experience of all large towns is that so much of the time of these officers is required in other directions that it is impossible for them to give to the roads the care and attention necessary to accommodate them to the demands of a large and constantly increasing public use.

Further than this, the selectmen have charge of so many of the town's interests that they are the rallying point of the local sectional and political antagonisms of the towns-people. They are not elected with reference to their probable action in respect to any one element of the town's affairs, but as the result of a practical combination of various interests. Their election is determined by their attitude upon the question of license, their views respecting the fire department, the care of the poor, and the like.

It is obvious that selectmen so chosen will not be as competent to devise and carry out a well-ordered system of roads as a board of commissioners selected wholly with reference to their fitness for the particular duty, and having no other duty to perform. No sensible person would suggest placing the schools of the town in charge of the selectmen. On the contrary, the necessity of a school-committee, elected for the express purpose of conducting the schools, is universally recognized. The same reasoning applies with equal force to the construction and maintenance of town roads.

In all town elections the chief contest is over the selectmen. This is due partly to the fact already stated, that they represent a variety of the town interests, and partly to the fact that sufficient compensation attaches to the office to make it desirable. Unpaid offices are not, as a rule, eagerly sought, nor will the incumbents of such offices resort to questionable or objectionable methods to continue in them. On the contrary, the public service of unpaid officers is generally performed with a single eye to the public good.

Experience has shown, however, that where elections are closely contested the temptation to expend the road funds in the manner best calculated to continue himself in office is too strong for the average selectman to wholly overcome. The great bulk of the town appropriation is for specific purposes from which it cannot be diverted. The appropriation for repairs and maintenance of highways is general, vague and indefinite. The direction of the expenditure is not specifically stated. Hence this appropriation is peculiarly adapted to indirect political and personal use. It was such a use that within a very few years covered our roads with the lame and halt and blind and lazy and crazy nominally [illegible] vices on election day.

Perhaps no stronger illustration of this tendency can be given than the statement that within the knowledge of the writer one of the most active and prominent Democratic citizens of the town frankly remarked, "Unless the control of the appropriations for highways can be kept in the hands of the Selectmen, the Democratic party of Quincy is dead." In other words, in the hands of the selectmen the roads become a part of the political machinery of the town and the appropriation is expended accordingly. These suggestions, of course, apply with equal force to a board, all the members of which are elected annually and to a board, only one member of which is elected annually.

These general considerations, with many others of a like nature, which the limits of this report will not permit to be stated, induced the Legislature, the great majority of whose members represent the towns of the state and have a personal and practical knowledge of town affairs, to enact the statute providing for road commissioners; and also induced the town of Quincy by a large majority, after a long agitation and exhaustive discussion of the question, to adopt its provisions. The reasons which led to the adoption of the act apply with equal force to the continuance under it.

Even if the road commission were a mere experiment, of extremely doubtful success, the undersigned would feel justified in maintaining that a two years' trial of it is not such a thorough and sufficient trial as reasonable and sensible persons would regard as conclusive. It is not an experiment, however. The system has been adopted in many towns of the state, and so far as the undersigned can ascertain, has invariably given satisfaction. It has never been abandoned by any town, but, on the contrary, where it has been tried it has become a permanent feature of the town government. The testimony in its favor is emphatic and uncontradicted.

So far as this town is concerned the undersigned are decidedly of the opinion that during the past two years more work and better work has been done upon the roads than ever before for the same expenditure of money; that a day's pay has been obtained only by doing a day's work; that the repairs of the roads have been more intelligently and skilfully directed; that a larger proportion of the outlay has been devoted to valuable and permanent improvements; that expenditures have been made, and improvements have been recommended, with a view to the convenience and necessities of the town considered as a whole, instead of as a number of independent districts, over which the town appropriation must be evenly (no matter how thinly) spread; and, finally, that the continuance of the commission will necessarily result in a practical, economical and comprehensive system of town ways, well and substantially built, and befitting the size and character and business of the town.

For these reasons the undersigned dissent from the report of the majority of the committee and recommend the town to indefinitely postpone article 40 of the warrant.

They also call the attention of the town to the fact that all the members of the present Board of Selectmen, who have given the subject careful consideration and are the best able, by reason of their experience as selectmen during the entire existence of the commission, to appreciate the question in all its bearings, concur in this recommendation.

ART. 44. To hear and act upon the report of any committee, and to choose any committee the town may think proper.

The Committee, although not specifically charged therewith, considered that it might be convenient for the Town that they should consider the warrant for Monday, March 24th, 1884, called at eight o'clock in the forenoon to act on the following articles, viz:

ART. 1. To choose a Moderator.

ART. 2. To see how the town will vote on the following question: Will the town pay a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to each soldier or sailor who re-enlisted between the first day of December, 1863, and the twentieth day of April, 1864, in the quota of said town, and served until the close of the late war, or was honorably discharged during said period, and has never received any bounty from said town, and raise the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars and appropriate the same to the payment of said bounties?

ART. 3. To see if the town will construct public sewer.

ART. 4. To see if the town will favor the building of a public sewer by a private corporation.

ART. 5. To see if the town accept the provisions of Sections 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68 Chapter 27 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts, choosing Selectmen and Assessors for one, two and three years.

They recommend that as soon as the second article is disposed of, the meeting be adjourned, to meet again at five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, at which time the remaining articles can be conveniently considered in connection with the business of the annual meeting. And at that time they recommend that article 3 be referred to a committee of five citizens to be appointed by the Moderator, who shall carefully consider the whole subject and report in writing so that their report may be printed before the next annual meeting, and considered under an appropriate article in the warrant for that meeting.

They further recommend that the fourth article be referred to the same committee.

As to the matter of the fifth article the Committee were unanimous in recommending the town to accept the Statutes providing for the election of Selectmen and Assessors for one, two and three years, but it being found that such acceptances can only be legally effected at an annual meeting, they can at present only advise the town to pass the following vote:

The Selectmen are hereby requested to cause to be inserted in the warrant for the next annual town meeting a copy of article five of this warrant.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

FURNITURE. There is now in Boston, one of the most extensive manufacturing establishments in America. The entrance to Paine's furniture warerooms is at 48 Canal street, opposite Maine depot. They not only manufacture, but also import from Italy curious carved pieces of the time of the Doges of Venice; from Switzerland fine lace curtains, from France inlaid woods, tapestries, and rich silks for upholstering; from England red, amber, blue and black hair cloth, in richly brocaded patterns, besides a large variety of lace curtains. These, together with their own numerous manufactures, will well repay one to travel miles to visit. Illustrated lists of these sent upon application.

Soldiers' Bounty.

THE TOWN OF STONEHAM.

Before Judge Devens of the supreme court, to-day, A. V. Lyde, counsel for L. D. Hawkins and twenty-four others, citizens and tax-payers of the town of Stoneham, made an application for an injunction to restrain the town from paying $11,000 in bounties to the soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion from the town, in accordance with the provisions of a special act of the Legislature for 1883, which provides that each soldier who served in the war on the quota of the town, or his heirs, should receive $125, and, it being represented that there were 88 soldiers who were entitled to this sum, a war tax of $11,000 was required to be raised. The plaintiffs claim that the act is ex post facto and void; that all who served in the war from the town and were promised bounties have been paid; that many who made up the town's quota had no contract with the town to receive bounties, and that the same cannot now be demanded of the town; that many of the plaintiffs have been assessed and paid taxes for bounties in other towns, and that it is a hardship and injustice to tax them a second time for this purpose. The plaintiffs further claim that many of the soldiers are dead and that their heirs have moved away from the town and that it is impossible to ascertain their names and places of residence. A preliminary injuction was granted, and an order was made returnable the third Tuesday in April for the respondents to show cause why it should not be made permanent. W. B. Stevens appeared for the respondents.—Boston Herald, March 19.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

MARCH.

Ah, surly March, you've come again,
With sleet and snow and hail and rain;
Cold earth beneath, dark sky above you,
What have you, pray, to make us love you?
No month is half so rough as you,
December winds less harshly blow;
What churlish ways! What storm-tossed tresses!
Your presence everyone distresses!
Haste, haste away! We longing wait
To greet fair April at our gate;
Cold earth beneath, dark sky above you,
Surely you've naught to make us love you.

"Ah, see those blossoms!" he replied,
Tossing his hail-torn cloak aside;
"Though other months have flowers a-many,
Say, are not mine as fair as any?
See, peeping from its dusky fold,
The crocus, with its cup of gold;
Violets, snowdrops white and stilly,
Sweeter than any summer lily;
And underneath the old oak leaves
Her fragrant wreath the arbutus weaves.
Whatever sky may be above me,
Surely for these all hearts will love me."

How to Make a Hot Bed.

From the middle of February to the latter part of March, according to the latitude, provide a quantity of fresh horse-manure from the stable; add to this, if they can be had, one-half its bulk of leaves; mix them thoroughly, tramping down the mass in successive layers, and form into a large pile, so the fermentation will proceed even in severe cold weather. In two or three days fermentation will be apparent by the escape of steam from the heap. Now turn again, and allow it to remain two or three days longer, or until the second fermentation commences. Prepare an excavation two and one-half feet deep, and of a size suited to the number of plants required. It should be made in some dry, sheltered spot, facing the South or East, if possible. Hot-bed sashes are usually 63 by feet, and one sash will generally give early plants enough for a large family. The frame for the sash should be eighteen inches high at the back, and twelve inches in front, which will give the proper slope to catch the most sunlight. Cross-pieces should be placed for the sashes to slide on, to facilitate opening and shutting the frames. When everything is ready, the manure is placed in the pit and trodden down firmly in layers to the required depth, two and one-half feet. Then put on the sashes, and keep close until the heat rises.

It will be too hot to sow the seeds now, but in two or three days it will subside to ninety degrees, when the soil may be put on to the depth of six or eight inches. The soil should be of well-rotted sods, mixed with fine, old manure, in equal parts, and in this the seeds may be sown thinly in drills two or three inches apart, and afterwards either thinned out or else transplanted to another frame. Air must be given every mild day by raising the sashes at the back. Water with tepid water when necessary, and during cold nights and snow storms keep covered with straw mats or shutters. Nearly all varieties of vegetable and flowering plants can be started with advantage in the hot-bed; tomatoes, peppers and egg-plants should be grown in a separate frame from the cabbage, cauliflower heat than the latter.

Hot-beds may be made on the surface of the ground, excepting that the manure should be at least a foot wider on all sides than the frame. In addition to the hot-bed, there should always be provided cold frames, of twice the capacity of the hot-bed. Into these the young seedlings can be planted as soon as they have made their second pair of leaves, provided of course the weather is not too cold at that time. These frames are made in the same manner as a hot-bed, excepting the pit and manure. Set the frame in a warm, protected situation, on the surface, and fork up the soil lightly, then fill to the depth of four inches with the same soil that is recommended for the hot-bed. In these frames plants can be grown on slowly, and got into the best possible condition for the flower or vegetable garden at the proper time.—Floral Cabinet.

Anecdotes.

A priest visited a coachman who was seriously ill.

"Have you the habit of going to the church?"

"I can't say that I have," said the coachman, in a feeble voice, "but I have driven a great many persons there."

"So Miss Skimps and Mr. Limbs are to get married. Well, I declare! That aged couple! And she is old enough to be his mother."

"Indeed she is. And as for him—why, he's old enough to be her father."

John Lounsbury, M. D., of Oxford, Ct., Graduate of the Medical Department of Yale College, a thorough Botanical Student, and who makes a specialty of Chronic Blood Disorders, states as follows concerning "Red Jacket Bitters:

OXFORD, CONN., August 14, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—I have examined your formula, and after visiting your establishment and witnessing your method of preparing these bitters, unhesitatingly testify that your bitters should produce favorable results in any affection of the liver. While many disorders of that organ cannot be cured, temporary relief may be afforded to the worst cases. These bitters should be beneficial in many forms of kidney complaint, and decidedly valuable in dyspepsia and in debility arising from malaria or other remote causes.

From Graham's Lectures.

But this point is not, in any measure, to be determined by what is called experience, or the fact that these substances can be habitually used as means of agreeable stimulation, without producing the immediate symptoms of the action of deadly poisons, for, as we have seen, if this be our criterion, we are forced to the fallacious conclusion that there is no such thing as a poison in nature. We have seen that the solids of the human body consist of three general tissues or forms of organic structure; that each of these tissues is endowed with peculiar vital properties; that these tissues compose the several organs and their vital properties, together with their vital affinities, which are under the control of the nervous power, constitute the vital forces of the organic economy, and the functional powers of the organs.

Now, then, whatever substance, by the action of its own intrinsic qualities, is immediately destructive to the vital properties and vital constitution of these tissues, is as certainly a poison as that two and two make four. If a real poison, in a very small quantity or very diluted form be brought to act on a living organ composed of these several tissues, as the stomach for instance, the organ may, by its own peculiar economy of vital reaction, and by the co-operation of the associated organs in the general vital economy, so far protect itself and the system from the pernicious properties of the poison as only to suffer considerable exhaustion of its vital powers, and depravity of its organic sensibilities. From this state the organ may be recovered by the renovating economy of the system. But if the poison be at first received in a highly concentrated form, or large quantity, it will either arrest the functions of life at once, by paralyzing the nervous power, or it will produce a violent reaction, and, in the terrible conflict, utterly exhaust the vital properties and destroy the vital constitution of the tissues, and death will be the result.

This is, therefore, the only true method of ascertaining the properties of substances, in relation to the physiological powers of the human body; and it is a matter which has been repeatedly and fully demonstrated, that all substances which I have named, contain a strong anti-vital quality, or, in other words, their effect on the living body is to destroy the vital properties and vital constitution of the tissues which compose the organs.

Household Receipts.

1776 CAKE. One cup butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, four eggs, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls cream tarter.

SPONGE CAKE. Take one and a half cups of sugar, three fresh eggs, one-half cup of milk, one and one-half cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one teaspoonful soda.

CITRON CAKE. One-half pound butter, one-half pound sugar, one pound

RYE DROP-CAKES OR MUFFINS. Two heaping cups sifted rye meal, an even teaspoonful of salt, two even teaspoonfuls of cream tartar and one of soda, two cups milk, three eggs, whites and yolks separate. A piece of butter half as large as a large egg, one tablespoonful of sugar. Bake in gem pans.

Never wash in warm water before going out in the cold air. Such a practice will roughen the skin. Warm water should be used only before retiring.

Nourishing and palatable soup is made by boiling a piece of ham with some dried lima beans. If you have beef stock also it will be all the better. Season with pepper and salt, dash of curry powder.

White pique makes pretty toilet mats. A bordering of scarlet worsted adds to the appearance.

Silver, either plated or solid, should be washed in hot suds, and dried quickly with a soft cloth.

To take out ink stains soak in milk for several hours, then apply a little lemon juice.

Tonsorial artist, who is equal to the emergency—"Oh, no sir; we always charge double when we have to hunt for the hair.

☞ "Yes, I've got a horrid cold," said Mrs. Jenkinson. "I've dosed and dosed, and I don't get one bit better. 'Pon my word, I believe I've taken no less than thirty-nine articles, and I begin to feel like an Episcopalian.—Boston Transcript.

That Granite Monument.

In answer to the inquiry of your correspondent in the PATRIOT of Feb. 16th, about the granite monument that stood in West Quincy, near the terminus of the first railroad in the United States, and was removed many years ago, we learn that it stood upon the summit of the hill now occupied by the Granite Railway Company, that it was about forty or fifty feet high, and large enough for a flight of stairs inside. It was erected by Col. Thomas H. Perkins, of Boston, and others, about the year 1827, to commemorate the event of building the first railroad in this country, and the commencement of the granite business at that place.

The writer of this remembers going up the hill to see this structure, and reading an inscription on the marble slab placed on the side of the monument. After standing about nine years it was blown over by a charge of powder in 1836. The granite works at that place had progressed so fast that it was in the way of enlarging their quarry, and the company is now getting granite nearly seventy feet below where this monument stood. The marble slab was taken out, placed in the office of the Granite Railway Company, which was burned about eighteen years ago, and the slab destroyed, and there appears to have been, unfortunately, no copy of the inscription preserved.

From a plan in possession of Mr. William Chesley, who has been a resident there ever since 1831, we learn that the monument was erected on the highest point of the hill, and that the top of the inclined railway was 81 feet above the bed of the road, and the summit of the hill was 92 feet above that, and by this plan the base of the monument was 173 feet above the road level. We have many times stood upon the top of this hill, as it now is, and have been delighted with the beautiful view. But from the top of the monument, some fifty feet higher, it must have been grand. Mr. Chesley informs us that Col. Perkins used very often to come out there afternoons with his spy-glass, and spend hours at the monument, enjoying the beautiful view.

MILLINERY.

Rich little crape creations take the lead in spring millinery. Not the pale shades that would seem to befit the time, but dark tissues relieved by oriental shimmerings or floral patterns in native pink, red and like, wrought on black. Crape is crape only in name; it crinkles not always with a standard crinkle; it shows a variety of surfaces, often a large rep across the fabric, or again is so embossed that one hardly notices the primeval ground work. In millinery, indeed, a marked feature of the time is an employment of material, and so far does this extend that any class of dress goods can be used, either for the entire making of the hat or bonnet or appear largely in the trimming, provided however that the costume to match is worn likewise.

are hardly adapted to the fancy crapes just mentioned, and are therefore less seen in combination than feathery grasses, fairy-like pompons, ears of grain, etc., united with iridescent and hovering dragon flies, butterflies, beetles, and other gay members of the insect tribes, that with outspread wings are made to quiver in changing lights and colors. Velvet ribbon is in extreme demand, and serves as an effective offset to these crapes of light quality, the more so as the accepted style of putting on is severe. A formal bow over the front quite often, the ends brought down plainly and forming strings. Not only dark colors are shown forth in these velvet ribbons, but white, pale pink, blue and the like.

MATERIALS.

The sighs of the summer lover will be heard across yards of cambric, batiste or satteen, covered with floral patters or heavily bestrewn with small fruits of all kinds—grapes, cherries, etc.,—while learned young ladies can select gowns laden with geometric figures placed at certain angles of distance. Extremely peculiar are designs where logs of wood or forest branches are scattered, at times the heart and inward grainings of the wood being noticeable, while interspersed among all these designs are fluttering humming-birds, or bright insects with spread-out wings, chiefly the inevitable butterflies or dragon-flies of the season.

SPRING NOTES.

Plain material is brought out to match almost all fancy and figured goods in cotton and dressy wools or silks, but for ordinary wools the plain tailor made are far more stylish. Holly wood is carved and painted in imitation of ivory, and in the way of buttons, buckles and drapery pins is a unique finish for costumes. A series of pamphlets is being issued this spring by Lord & Taylor, thus giving fresher information than is possible in a catalogue. Each one is devoted to some special department, and in sending, therefore, give an idea of what you wish to know. The revival of poplins marks an event in dress goods, but these are not more notable than Imperial cords, in which the rep runs parallel with the selvage.

MME. MODJESKA'S TOILETTES.

As Nadine in the new play of Nadjezda, she appears in a beautiful toilette of brocade, shaded from deep orange to pale yellow. Square neck, train, and sleeves of brocaded gauze, with deep-pointed apron front, and partial bodice of the same. The second, a white moire antique, heart-shaped neck, short sleeves, train, and rich ornamentation of white roses and green leaves. A pretty contrast is given by a basket she carries, which contains several brilliant bouquets. Third, a blue satin, with train, square neck, elbow sleeves, and blue hat with wide brim rolled back on one side. Fourth, a walking dress of gray silk, with black velvet mantelet and black bonnet.

All through the Spring,
When Tonics seemed the proper thing,
To cure that ills these seasons bring?

MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?

When bilious headache seemed the style,
And torpid liver clogged with bile
Caused fifty frowns to every smile?

MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?

When dull and languid in the morn,
With putrid breath and face forlorn,
His taste departed and ambition gone?

MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

WHAT DID HE TAKE?

When carbuncles or scrofula sore,
And more he'd free, the more 'twould swarm,
To ruthless ravage his poor person?

MORSE YELLOW DOCK.

Spring is the time to use a blood purifier. MORSE'S YELLOW DOCK acts directly on the blood, the liver and digestive organs, and cures and relieves when other remedies fail. ## Poetry.

For the Patriot.

To a Sunbeam.

Come in, little sunbeam, and dance on the floor!
We'll open the windows, and wide swing the door;
You are welcome, thrice welcome! bright little guest;
Did you come all unheeded, or by special request?
O, you just knew I wished you to come,
And so trotted along with a sunshiny hum.
Well, I'm so glad you understand just what's in my heart!
Shall we always be friends, and never more part?
I know you'll be honest, you are always so bright;
And a feller feels spunky like, when crowned with your light.
And now, little sunbeam, take a peep round the room,
Look sharp in each corner, and along by the broom;
Because by your light I can see all the dust,
And in your capability I can perfectly trust.
It's so cheery, you know, when all is neat and trim,
And especially so when sunbeams pop in
And so, little sunbeam, will you shine in my heart,
And teach me to patiently do all my part?
Teach me to merrily, earnestly work
To keep out the weeds which in corners may lurk.
Because it is harder to keep the heart clean
Than to brush up the carpets that are dusty, I ween.
And just as they you on the little spring flowers,
Will you come and abide in these hearts of ours?
That they may grow beautiful in life's busy throng,
And blend in the chorus of a grand, sweet song.
MAY LOVEJOY.

Miscellany.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

Mrs. Clericus held up an exceedingly dilapidated pink apron and as she gazed at it she sighed. She was not a woman given to sighing, and moreover, the condition of the aforesaid apron was no novelty in her household; but she was tired out; soul and body tired with clothing and feeding five healthy, growing children, and one stout, nervous man, and so she indulged in the (to her) unwonted luxury of a sigh.

Dr. Clericus, as the unusual sound smote his ear, glanced quickly up from the paper he was perusing, at the very pretty, somewhat worn face, opposite him. It had been, and was still, a refined and restful face; the blue, steadfast eyes held a ray of light in them and yet she sighed.

"What is it, Theodora?" queried her husband, "are you sick?" For such an unwonted, unwarranted fact as that sigh, he said, must have a cause, and he named the most direful one he could imagine.

A mild spasm of surprise crossed the pale face. "No, Harrison," she replied, "only perplexed and very tired."

He went back to the table review he had been reading, but the sigh haunted him, and he turned the paper impatiently over. A notice of a convention met his eye—Sea View, a place he used to visit when a young man, where some of his finest sermons had been written; where he first met and loved Theodora. A thought struck him; a "fancy" he called it then; an "inspiration" in the years after.

"Theodora," said he, "can you be ready to go to the convention at Sea View next week, and stay till the close of the week after?"

Now, this is what she would call a special providence. She needed rest and change and the salt sea spray. The children, the beach, and the astounding novelty of the request, all floated in a mixed chaos through her brain, as she answered somewhat faintly, "to Sea View? The children cannot be left alone, can they?"

"Well, sister Wiggs will be willing to see to them and the house, and Laura is old enough to help her."

He looked at her as he spoke. How she came to answer, very meekly, "Yes, I'll go," Mrs. Clericus could never tell; but so she answered.

The house was duly swept and garnished in readiness for the minute inspection of sister Wiggs, and also for the careful reporting of such inspection, the sister being of that generous disposition that yearns to share with the community at large all the knowledge acquired by her in her travels.

With the soft "goodbye" of her daughter Laura, the boisterous hug of Master Tom, the wondering farewells of golden-haired Eva and sturdy Frank and the half smothered howl of baby Reginald, (extinguished somewhat suddenly in the thoughtful Laura's apron) Mrs. Clericus left the parsonage, for the first time for years, for a fortnight vacation.

After reaching Sea View, and getting over the first rapture of rest, she began to feel lonely, and perhaps, a little homesick. She had been used to the clatter and bustle of so many children, and now, only the very silent man, the Doctor for company; and he was absorbed in visions of a very splendid address he was to deliver the next week. Alone she walked the beach and roamed the large parlors of the hotel. But on the third day came the Rev. Lewis Nimbletongue. He was an old friend of the doctor's wife. Now she found company. He was just from a visit to her native town; and the hours were too short for the queries and comparing of notes that took place. In two days, as he knew everybody, he had introduced Mrs. Clericus right and left with his accustomed vigor. She waked up to the fact that once she was a brilliant talker. Her pale cheek grew rosy, and her almost forgotton soft laugh was heard once more. And still the Doctor poured over his wondrous essay, nor woke up to the fact that Louis almost monopolized the society of his wife.

But at last he woke up, and this was the fashion of his wakening. He sat on the lounge of the hotel parlor, with the eternal notebook and pencil in his hand polishing for the fifteenth time an intellectual diamond when two men on the other side of the closed blinds began the following dialogue.

"Who is that remarkable pretty woman with Nimbletongue this afternoon?"

"That is the wife of Dr. Clericus, one of the big guns of the convention next week."

"Sure of it?" said the other skeptically; "never have seen him with her once."

"Oh! he is a moveable lexicon, an animated sermon-bill. Don't even know that he's got a pretty wife. Nimbletongue knows it, though, and did they say, before she married the Doctor. Why on earth do men marry who only care for a dictionary and the original Hebrew, I wonder?"

"Well she is a pleasant and agreeable woman; a keen talker, too. Nimbletongue is a good fellow, but dreadfully careless and talkative, and he will get her gossiped about if he don't take care." And the two arose and strolled down the avenue after the pair just discussed.

The intellectual diamond was polished no more. Dr. Clericus sat and meditated until his wife herself aroused him from his reverie.

"Theodora," said he that evening, "what are your engagements for to-morrow?"

"Nothing much, Harrison," she replied; "a ramble to the village, eight or ten of us; a sort of picnic, I believe. Why did you ask?"

"Would you—cannot you arrange it so as to go with me to High Rock to-morrow? But if you would rather go to the village, we will go there instead."

It was the place where she had promised to wed the now grave, but then young and ardent minister. Of course there was but one answer to that question. The picnic engineered by Mr. Nimbletongue next day missed Mrs. Clericus very sadly.

What a day the minister's wife had! They revived old reminiscences, looked at the lovely prospect, lunched on ambrosia and nectar, and neither pencil nor notebook dared to appear. The Doctor wondered why he didn't talk more to Theodora; and she—well, wives know how she felt.

Somehow, after that, he was with her every day. One day he actually read to her his famous address.

"How will it do?" he asked.

She praised it a little dubiously.

"What is it, Theo?" he asked anxiously.

"It is eloquent," she stammered, and then said, "could not you put a little more Christ in it, just a few texts that come so comfortably to one in trouble? But I've no right to criticise a production like that, but you asked me, Harry," and the name and the soft touch on his arm disarmed his somewhat wrathful spirit. He altered and vitalized the whole sermon.

The address of Dr. Clericus took wonderfully, but he was only conscious of a phin of approving blue eyes that watched every word. At last he forgot even them and himself, also in the delivery of God's message.

The Doctor asked his wife on the morning of their return, if she would jot down, from time to time, any special text that helped her on in life, and how it did so, and somewhat wonderingly promised to do as she was asked.

The parsonage, the children and Sister Wiggs all gave them a rapturous greeting, and the next day the minister's wife entered on the old life but with a thread woven through it. Her husband is never so exclusively absorbed in his studies as to neglect home life. His people found a new humanity in his sermons, an underlying current of God's love that day by day makes its power felt. Let one of the many comments on the preaching be recorded:

"What a sermon we had to-day, Samantha," said farmer Smith, as they sat at home, one Sabbath evening. "He is improving wonderfully. Not quite so flowery as he used to be, but good, sound gospel sermons that you can plant your foot on, and it stays."

"Yes," replied his buxom wife, "things I can think over about my work, over my washing, and they help me wonderfully. He does improve, Samuel, that's so."

"Well," broke out sharp-eyed, somewhat doubting Miranda, their only child, "he preaches just as his wife lives. I've been there sewing a week, you know, and she don't talk to me nor pray at me, but she just lives before me all the time. She's got the genuine article," and her voice faltered, as she added, "I wish I had it, too, and if I do get it, it will be owing to her," and she left the room.

Miranda had been the theme of many anxious prayers, and do you wonder that her parents felt the minister's wife to be a little the best woman that ever lived. Dr. Harrison Clericus never knew why farmer Smith doubled his subscription for the support of the gospel that year; and he wonders why all the people love him so much, and listen with such earnestness to his sermons. But his people all know the reason. They are sermons with plenty of Christ in them now, and more and more is the Doctor learning to value the wise counsel and loving help of that intellectual woman and earnest Christian, the minister's wife.

Country Newspapers.

The Philadelphia Times of a recent issue contained the following solid chunks of correct philosophy concerning the country newspaper:—

"The country newspaper is the most useful and least complicated of all the agencies which stamp the impress of progress upon villages and inland cities. Without the aid of local newspapers local towns are, as a rule, thriftless and dead. It is common for small great men to speak with contempt of the local newspapers, but the village newspaper makes more great men out of less material—more bricks without straw, than any other factor in politics, and it is the one ladder on which men climb to local distinction as the beginning of wider fame. The advent of the local newspaper has always dated the increased thrift of the community. The local newspaper is the life of the locality, and the measure of its support, as a rule, measures the advancement of the people. Not only subscribe but pay for your local newspapers. They are both the friends and helpmates of all seasons.

For the Patriot.
A Public Peril.

"There are two public perils which threaten immediately, and on every side, the society in which we live. One of them is sensuality, in the three principal forms of luxurious living, intemperance in drinking, and impurity. No one of these gross sins is confined to one class of people; for, although wealth may be said in some sense to be necessary to luxury, yet among the middle and poorer ranks, hardly less than among the rich, in country and city alike, we see an eager passion for excitements, and indulgencies which are in no true sense moral or intellectual but animal.

The other special danger threatens most the safety of our children, etc. If you ask yourselves the question how and where most of the boys and girls now growing up among us are expected to get a thorough and consistent training in the principles and practice of Christian morality, or in the elements of Christian character, you will, probably in shaping your answer, come upon the appalling fact that I refer to. It will be acknowledged that such a training is not to be found for a majority of the children, anywhere. It is left by the families to the common schools, and by the common schools, utterly engrossed with secular studies, to the Sunday-schools, and by unsystematized and ill-governed Sunday-schools (where vast numbers of the children never appear) to chance. We hear the note of alarm. Juvenile crime increases at a fearful pace. Crowds of the young of both sexes, without parents or any protection whatever from the worst harm, are seen on the streets every evening. Their manners in public conveyances and other places are rude and even immodest. They are already on the verge of ruin. In cities they are drawn into pool-rooms, theatres, saloons, innumerable pitfalls. In rural spots, too, they are not secure, because their moral life has not been nurtured and strengthened alone with their physical and mental life. This generation has fallen thoughtlessly into this danger, losing in many ways much of the home breeding of our ancestors, and is just waking up to the discovery of it. The Church certainly has its divine law, and knows its duty. It is pledged to educate as a Christian, and rear for immortal life, every child it baptizes. If it is recreant to that trust it cannot escape the curse, in a disobedient, disorderly, profane and dissolute offspring. It is for the wisdom of our wisest men, clergy and parents, to meet this grave problem and to devise measures befitting its importance. Meanwhile the holy obligation laid on mothers and fathers in their homes is clear. The line between good and evil is to be drawn sharply, and early. All light is needed, all possible counsel is to be obtained. The guiding grace of God is to be sought. Where shall it be sought if not at His mercy-seat and altar?"

I commend these significant words taken from the Lenten Pastoral of Bishop Huntington of New York, to the thoughtful consideration of the fathers and mothers of the town of Quincy. Read them in the light of that ever increasing number of fast and godless youth throughout this country,—results of the pernicious influences which are permitted to surround the young, as well as the careless neglect on the part of parents to foster and instil, by word and example, those fundamental principles of moral and spiritual law which develop all true Christian manhood. Read them in the light of what has lately startled this town with the knowledge of an evil which might have found a foothold in more homes than have come before the public notice. Whatever punishment may eventually be decided upon by the authorities, it is certain that neither a thoughtless good-natured excuse for the offence, nor a blind sentimentality for the feelings of those who surely have been culpably negligent of parental duty, nor a too rigorous penalty, will be for the moral good of the offenders, or will add adequate weight to the lesson it is now necessary to teach. It becomes the duty of all those interested in the morality of this town to urge that something be done to emphasize the danger which is undermining the home foundations on which rest the purity and the probity of our national life, and to raise an earnest warning against that lack of discipline, that carelessness of personal oversight and instruction, that blind indifference for loving, reasonable obedience on the part of children which sends the youth of both sexes to learn the wretched slang of the street corners, to speak and jest about things of which it is a shame to think of, even in secret, and to read the vile stuff which differs only in intellect, but not in morality, from those sensational parodies of literature found in the hands of their elders, and to become the dissolute, lawless members of society, rather than under the influence and with the honored memory of a manly father and a womanly mother, to become faithful citizens, as well as God-fearing Christians. ### Letter from New York City.

The largest number of immigrants arriving by any one vessel from Europe, since last September, reached here on the 17th inst., on the steamship "Werra." There were 1012.

The temperance movement has had a new impetus in this vicinity lately. Large meetings have been held in the suburban towns, and a strong interest is manifested by all classes. In Plainfield, N. J., last Monday evening, over three thousand people were present at union meetings held in two of the churches, and many signed the pledge. Jersey City, Montclair and other places have also been "revived."

St. Patrick's Day in the morning brought out a large number of patriotic Irishmen, either to assist in the parade or enjoy the pleasant reunions which such an occasion always calls forth. The day here was very pleasant, and the procession was a decided success. Among other gatherings in the evening was the centennial anniversary of the organization of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, at the Hotel Brunswick. Many prominent gentlemen were among the invited guests, and some of the speakers were Chief Justice Daly, Judge J. F. Daley, Robert Sewell, Henry Ward Beecher, who was made an honorary member, and Chauncey M. Depew. One of the remarkable statements made was that the "Irish race participated with Columbus in the discovery of America," according to the Scandinavian records.

Applications for a new stage route up town, and new ferry lines from 14th St. to Hoboken, and from Pier No. 2 to Brooklyn, are now under consideration.

The affairs of the Madison Avenue Congregation Church were brought to a focus by the calling of a council, which met last week. This council was called by the anti-Newman faction of the church, was declared illegal by their opponents, the council decided itself to be a legitimate one, and then proceeded to the consideration of the three questions laid before it, which were, viz.: 1st, What is the relation of the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman to the Madison Avenue Congregational Church? 2d, Is it desirable that it be continued? 3d, Has a Congregational church a right to hold business meetings by itself in its own house? These questions were decided as follows: 1st, That Dr. Newman was only the acting pastor, since he had never formally accepted the church's call to the pastorate, and had never been installed. 2d, that the council did not wish to do more than suggest, in regard to this question, but that it deemed it to be advisable for the church as a body to hold a regular meeting, to be announced from the pulpit, and to be held in the building, and that this question be then amicably decided by the church. 3d, that a Congregational church most decidedly had a right to hold meetings of any kind relating to the welfare of the organization, without asking the permission of the Trustees. Both parties claim the victory in the decision of the council, but the general understanding is that a compromise will soon be effected, which will be satisfactory to all interested.

Commodore John H. Upshur, commandant of the Brooklyn navy yard, retires from service there on the 31st inst., to take command of the Pacific squadron. Accordingly last Tuesday evening the members of the Brooklyn Club tendered him a farewell dinner at the club house. All but two of the members were present. Impromptu speeches were made by Major Low, General Woodward and others.

It has been discovered that much harm is being done to children by what is known as "rock and rye drops," a kind of candy bought extensively by the school children of Brooklyn. There has been found in half a pound of the candy enough essence of whiskey to intoxicate a child. It is probable that its sale will be prohibited in Brooklyn, as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has taken up the matter. W. L. M.

Fast Day Proclamation.

Governor Robinson has issued the following proclamation for a day of fasting and prayer:

"In accordance with the sacred custom transmitted from the fathers, in harmony with the general sentiment of the people, and in recognition of the mercies and blessings of the Divine Providence, I do hereby, with the advice and consent of the Council, appoint Thursday, the third day of April next, to be observed throughout the Commonwealth as a day of fasting and prayer.

"And I do earnestly urge the need and the duty of acknowledging on that day, in the homes and in the accustomed places of public worship, the great goodness and overruling power of Him who is now, as ever before, the God of nations and of individuals—the Heavenly Father who, in loving kindness, bestows every precious gift upon man.

"May our prayers be to Almighty God that the bereaved and the distressed may have consolation and support; that the holy administrations of noble men and women, diligent in their self-sacrifice in behalf of the needy, the fallen, the outcast, may be helpfully encouraged; that integrity and incorruptibility in public and in private station may everywhere prevail; that industry, intelligence, good order and righteousness may be universally held to constitute the best title to honorable citizenship; and that the whole people may reverently appreciate the abundant benefactions of His Providence, and unfalteringly walk in His ways."

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 29, 1884.

RECOVERED AND IDENTIFIED. The body of a man was found in Neponset river on Tuesday forenoon, and Officer N. B. Furnald of this town identified it as that of Alexander Davidson, who resided on Town Hill, Quincy. Mr. Davidson has been missing since the 6th of November, since which time nothing has been heard of him. He was a stone polisher and was married. He was a member of Clan McGregor, and this organization marched in a body to Mount Wollaston Cemetery on Wednesday afternoon, to attend the funeral of their brother member. It is supposed to have been a case of suicide, as Mr. D. was in a melancholy mood at the time of his disappearance.

CONCERT. On Fast night our citizens will enjoy one of the most delightful entertainments, in the shape of a concert of war songs. This concert will be given in the Town Hall, under the auspices of Paul Revere Post, with Mr. Elmer A. Pierce, of Boston, as musical director. This entertainment promises to be one of the most interesting and enjoyable ever given in Quincy, as it will be comprised of those sweet and pathetic songs which were composed and generally sung during the late war. Wherever these concerts have been given they have called forth crowded houses, and have elicited great praise. We bespeak for the Post on this occasion a packed hall.

PEOPLE'S COURSE. On Saturday evening, April 5, the Mrs. H. M. Smith Concert Company will give the last entertainment for this season. A limited number of reserve seats are now on sale at John O. Holden's, at 25 cents each. The deserved reputation which this company enjoys warrants the belief that every seat will be sold before the doors are opened. Three hundred admission tickets at ten cents each can be had at the usual place.

THE ASSAULT. The assault case at the Good Templar's hall, last week, of which we had a notice, came before Judge Humphrey on Wednesday last. After hearing numerous witnesses, occupying several hours, it came to a close. The Judge said, technically, there was an assault, but so slight that he should impose the smallest fine the law allowed, which was one dollar.

SAD AFFAIR. The many friends of Mrs. William H. French were greatly shocked to learn of her sudden death which took place on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. French has been in a desponding mood for a long time, owing to her feeble health, and in a moment of frenzy, her mind was overbalanced, and death ended her troubles. The family have the sympathies of all in this sudden and sad affliction.

JURORS. Messrs. Benj. C. Barlow and Wm. E. Badger, of Quincy, have been drawn to serve as Jurors for the Superior Court for Norfolk County, criminal session, April term; and Mr. John W. Nash to serve as Grand Juror for the year.

REAL ESTATE. Ellen S., wife of Elijah Faunce, has sold to W. C. Dunham, two lots of land on the southwest side of Newport avenue, Wollaston, for $1200.

LEGISLATURE. In the Senate on Wednesday, Hon. William A. Hodges, in behalf of the Committee on Public Health, presented a bill imposing a fine not exceeding ten dollars for bathing in ponds used for water supply.

☞ The Rev. Mr. Younkin of the Methodist-Episcopal Church, Wollaston, closes his year and probably his pastorate to-morrow. The sacrament will be administered and the reception of members attended to. In the evening he will conclude his lecture "on books and reading" which was commenced sometime ago.

OBITUARY. Mr. William F. Temple widely known as the secretary of the Dorchester Mutual Fire Insurance Company, died at his home at Neponset on Sunday last after a lingering illness. Mr. Temple was born in Dorchester, April 8, 1810. At the age of 26 he married Miss Millie H. French of Canton. In early life he began business in a small way at Canton, and afterward accepted the position of secretary of the Dorchester Cotton Manufacturing Company of Dorchester, where he remained until the company gave up business in 1855. He then went to Neponset, where he was active in the incorporation of the Dorchester Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and was elected secretary, which position he held till the time of his death. He was finely educated, and his strict integrity was known far and near. He was a member of Union lodge of Masons and Neponset lodge, I. O. O. F. He leaves a widow, three sons and two daughters. His funerel was held at the family residence on Wednesday, and was largely attended by old business men, among whom were the board of directors of the Dorchester Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

A chorus of twenty-four voices will render the music.

The church has received an invitation from the Congregational church in the centre to unite with them at their place of worship for a Fast Day service. The invitation has been accepted; the exercises begin at 11 o'clock.

The annual parish meeting of the society was held on Wednesday evening and considerable business transacted.

The officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Clerk and Treasuer, Mr. J. L. Whiton; Auditor, Mr. C. H. Sherburne; Prudential Committee, Messrs. Alfred Sampson, T. H. Newcomb and J. L. Whiton; Musical Committee, Mrs. S. J. Penney, Mrs. C. Sampson and Mr. T. H. Newcomb.

PERSONAL.

Mr. T. Harris Newcomb has retired from the choir of the Congregational Church, where he has sang for the past forty years, and been chorister for more than twenty. His face among the singers was missed much last Sunday. Being interviewed, he said that he thought he had done his duty, and that some younger man should fill the place. Great thanks are due him for the faithful and efficient manner in which he has fulfilled the duties of the position, and he will be long and gratefully remembered by both church and society.

The large new polishing shop of Messrs. Hughes & Son is just completed by Mr. Eliab Ramsdell, and they have already commenced business.

The fine cottage-house of J. McNeil on Willard street is fast approaching completion.

F. J. Fuller has improved his business facilities by putting in a new saw for the purpose of sawing granite.

The St. Mary's C. T. A. Association is preparing to give a musical variety entertainment and dance at their hall soon. It promises to be highly interesting.

The Apollo Club still maintains its interest, and next Tuesday evening a mock trial will be in order.

A "Hymn Service" will be given in the audience room of the M. E. Church next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. It will consist of reading of hymns, congregational singing, solos, quartettes, etc. The programme which has been arranged for the occasion by Mr. C. T. Cole, promises to be very interesting, and will close his labors as organist with the church which has extended through the past five of six years.

The friends of Mr. W. A. Boyd will regret that he has left the employ of Mr. Harris Farnum, where he has been for nearly seven years.

Mr. F. A. Read, of Providence, R. I. has purchased the drug store belonging to Mr. C. T. Cole, which he will occupy April 1st. Mr. Read comes highly recommended as an accomplished druggist, having held responsible positions in that business for many years. We hope he may receive the encouragement and patronage of the people, as he will make improvements in the store and will try to please everyone as far as possible.

☞ A newspaper correspondent has taken the trouble to count the spittoons in the House of Representatives, and finds that there are 450. There are 293 members, and an economical member has suggested that the number of spittoons be reduced to 293, or one for each member. It would be much more economical to reduce the number of representatives, and not bother about the spitoons at all.

☞ The national census of 1880 gives for the first time important statistics relating to the business of the country. It appears that the aggregate wealth of the United States in 1880 was $43,642,000,000; that the total amount of capital invested in business was $8,177,000,000, and the number of persons engaged in business was 703,327. It is a noteworthy result that twenty-two per cent. of all the business capital of the country is credited to the State of New York.

COMMON-SENSE FERTILIZER. Rev. W. S. McKenzie, D. D., of Winchester, writes:

Gents:—The fertilizer which I purchased of you last spring was used in my gardens, with a strong suspicion as to its merits, really surprised and delighted me. You should have seen my crops of peas, corn, beans, especially tomatoes. They were the most prolific growth I ever saw. My neighbors frequently expressed astonishment as they looked into my garden. Every man with any common sense will use the Common-Sense Fertilizer.

☞ The small boys are preparing for their April fool jokes on Tuesday next.

A bill has been introduced in the Ohio Legislature providing for the raising of all inundated portions of Cincinnati above high water mark, at a cost of $10,000,000.

Who is to Blame?

Editors of the Patriot: —

"He who would the sword of Heaven bear,
Should be as holy as severe."

Your issue of last week contains some singular correspondence. To read *'s letter one would think it was written by an hermit. The literature referred to, and the periodicals "Golden Days," and such like "pure" reading for youths are all tainted with the "sensational." The "New York Weekly" and other story papers are "pernicious," if tried by the standard of some folks' "purity," and even the Boston Daily Globe has just completed "The Red Hand." The parties who make such an outcry do not hesitate to read "Jack, the Giant Killer," "Robinson Crusoe," and such like "pure literature," or deny it to their children. The Public Library contains plenty of "poisonous trash;" even our Bible is "pernicious" to the morals of youth if some portions are read alone. "Jack Shepard," "Claude Duval," "The Arabian Nights," and other entertaining "five-cent libraries" and "dime novels" of our youth, did not make any very great "highwaymen," or set many boys looking for "Aladdin's Lamp." "Two Years Before the Mast" did not cause any very great rush for the sea, so to lay the blame of youthful depravity to one class of novels more than to another is a singular shifting of responsibility.

If * is a father or mother, he or she, instead of whining, should banish Shakespeare and Lord Byron, and not encourage novel reading of one sort more than another. It is not what we read that injures, but the habit abused, which, tiring of the mild "Sunday School" novels, seeks the exciting ones by the same evolution that the moderate drinker develops into the drunkard. That best of books, the Bible, to putrid minds is the essence of obscenity, but "to the pure all things are pure." The nude in art is obscene to depraved natures, but to the artist it is God's handiwork. To counteract any impure seed sown in the minds of *'s children, let he or she see to it that Sunday School novels, "Jack, the Giant Killer," "Old Mother Hubbard," and the "blood and thunder" stories of "chivalry," with its "daggers and pistols" of gallant knights who "went around like roaring lions," seeking whom to devour—on paper, is never read where * can control; and let him or her put all "fairy tales" into the fire, or else *'s children will read all about the "paraphernalia of hell," and wear it as unblushingly as your correspondent, "H. A. K." does; as it is evident that much reading has debased his mind to such an extent that he would not, if he could help it, let the bones and dust of the hallowed dead rest in peace in the old cemetery, but under pretence of a great interest in the welfare of "the youth of our time," would scatter it to the four winds, so that he could loaf around that spot of a summer evening, without the solemnizing influences of "communion with the dead." Surely "pure" minds could find some other place to play base-ball in than a place hallowed by age and the remains of those of the town who have gone before. "He covets and desires other people's goods even to their graves and vaults! He would condescendingly allow the relatives to remove the contents of the graves, and erect their stone memorials in some other place where they would not obstruct his vision. Very generous, indeed! but why, if to accommodate those only who lounge around the Post Office, does he not recommend that the church be torn down and let all the congregation assemble in the Square that could then be made close by the Post Office? Good literature for youths to read,—pay no respects to God's Acre. Teachers of patriotism would not hesitate to dishonor the graves of the founders of the town! Good instruction for youth to follow,—"Rattle his bones over the stones," to some dump, or peddle it around to farmers for manure!

Yea, verily, there is literature, and literature besides "dime novels" and "five-cent libraries," demoralizing in its effects on its readers, as exemplified in "H. A. K.," when he wants to have a hack with his little hatchet at the old landmarks of the town. And then how sublime he is in his devotion to simplicity! He would be content with a simple granite shaft to the memory of John Hancock. Some folks think (although they may not have read as much "pure literature" as "H. A. K." has) that there was somebody by the name of Adams whose name is pretty well known throughout the country, and it has been rumored that somebody called Quincy used to occupy a prominent position somewhere in the country, and tradition says that Adams and Quincy both lived in the town of Quincy some portion of their lives, so to encourage the "courage and patriotism" of the "youth of our time" and keep them from going "astray;" why not ask Mr. Henry H. Faxon to erect three plain shafts of granite to the memory of this illustrious trinity of the town, Hancock, Adams and Quincy, instead of erecting the drinking-fountains which he offers to give; surely it would be a good lesson on impartiality for our youths. It would also have been more encouraging to the patriotism of our youth to have seen the town pay the soldiers' bounties without such an unseemly wrangle being made by the "eminently respectable citizens" of the town, who endeavor to repudiate their obligations to those who in the time of the country's peril denied themselves the pleasure of fortune making, and undertook the toils and risks of the "battle and the breeze," in shoddy uniforms and paper brogans.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 25th, 1884.

Both branches of Congress have discussed important questions during the week, but few important bills have passed. The Senate has had under consideration, pension claims, cattle diseases, the bill for fixing the salaries of U. S. District Judges at $5,000 a year, and the Educational bill. Senator Blair, who has charge of the latter, has had a hard time, so far, in furnishing national aid to the free schools of the States. One day his measure was displaced by the foot and mouth disease resolution. Next day, when it came up, in regular order, a move was made to lay it aside for the Pleuro-pneumonia bill. By a call of the yeas and nays knowledge triumphed over disease, but its victory had scarcely been announced, when a Senator arose and said as the school bill appropriated a large amount of money and involved serious considerations, he hoped it would be postponed. This was too much for Mr. Blair who gave way to his feelings in a remark that calves, cattle, and all sorts of things were allowed to run over the children of this country.

The House of Representatives passed the Postoffice Appropriation bill and worked through a number of private measures, but its principal talk was about whiskey.

A preliminary canvass of the House on Saturday at one o'clock led the friends of the bill to fear a dozen votes would be wanting to pass it. During the whiskey debate Mr. Cox of New York made a tariff reform speech, stating apologetically that he was relevant as his subject was all bound up with whiskey. It was all about the tariff, however, its inconsistencies, and inignities, and the necessity for reduction. When he finished Mr. Horr of Michigan asked him which side of the whiskey question he was on. He replied that he would express his opinion by a vote.

During the week a convention was held in this city by colored journalists, representing all the prominent colored news papers of the country, and a permanent organization of a national news bureau was effected by the election of officers and committees. Enthusiastic speeches were made against adopting a resolution for the purpose of consolidating the colored press in favor of a prominent republican candidate for the Presidency. They refused to commit themselves by specifying in advance any particular candidate.

The Democratic caucus has been called to meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday evening. Every member of the Democratic party of the House is invited to attend. Beside the signature of the Chairman of the caucus, Hon. S. S. Cox, names of a dozen or more representatives are attached to the request. The names are not significant, however, the signers being those Democrats who happened to be nearest to Mr. Morrison when he was preparing the paper.

Every indication now points to unprecedented activity in this city during the building season. The plans for a large number of handsome private dwellings are in the hands of the architects. Beside the public improvements already in course of construction, the new Pension office, which is now all up in the second story; the west wing of the new State Department building; the reconstructed model room of the Patent office and other works; several new ones are projected. These are a new city post office, a Congressional library, an observatory, and hall of records. Some school buildings are to go up, a number of fine business houses, and other private enterprises are under way that will add much to the architectural attractiveness of the city.

Another proposed improvement is a Department Telephone system, so that two Cabinet officers can hold private conversations without leaving their offices. The wires are to be laid under ground, and all the executive departments will be connected; the White House, Government Printing office, and probably the Capitol. If the Secretary of the Navy should want to talk with the Secretary of the Treasury, an indicator in the Navy department would answer his ring and the telegraph operator, learning what was wanted through the telephone, would at once connect with the Secretary of the Treasury. An indicator has already been erected in the Navy department, and thirteen new telephones have been ordered for use in the State, War, and Navy department buildings.

Be Kind to the Dogs.

While passing through Mount Wollaston Cemetery last Wednesday, I was very much affected by seeing a large Newfoundland dog, laying beside a newly made grave with his paws laid across it. I could not help thinking if human beings would only love each other as this poor dumb beast did his friend, what a much happier world this would be. SARAH TAYLOR.

CORN ON PHOSPHATE ALONE. In the spring of 1879 I took one acre of poor, sandy land that never was manured. I had no sward, in fact nothing but now and then a pine bush. I ploughed it, and planted corn, using 400 pounds Bradley's Phosphate on the acre, and had a good crop. The next year did the same, with like good results. In short, I have raised corn on this land five years in succession, with no fertilizer but from 400 to 600 pounds of Bradley's Phosphate, and each year the crop has increased. On other portions of my farm I have experimented with seven different fertilizers, and Bradley's has in every case proved superior to any other. I feel sure of good crops of all kinds when I use Bradley's Phosphate. D. M. RANDALL.

The Old Burying-Ground.

QUINCY, Mar. 25, 1884.

DEAR PATRIOT: I would like to say a few words in regard to the first of "two suggestions," printed in last week's PATRIOT.

I think the writer of the article merely meant to suggest the idea of taking the old burying-ground for a park in order to arouse an interest among the people and agitate the park movement. The writer could not have been in earnest; how much would the matter be helped by taking that small piece of sacred soil for a pen for the loafers who require two policemen to keep the sidewalks clear? I see it as a joke. It cannot be otherwise. I would rather suggest having a strong, high wall around the ground, with a gate, locked, and the key placed in the hands of some responsible person residing near, who might furnish any person having an interest in the place with the key, when required. How is it that people will craze after old furniture, old china, old coins, etc., and so recklessly ruin old burial places? I hope that little spot will always, or for a long time remain as it is, being kept in good order.

New people are fast coming into the town, and to them this sacred little spot has no interest; but in our schools, where the children of this new people will be taught year after year, they will hear the names of Hancock, the Quincys, and Adamses. They can see the names of some of them on the tombs and monuments in this same burying-ground. Children do not seem to notice death now as they did in the days when in the early morning the Unitarian bell would toll the age of someone departed. The solemn sound impressed all who heard it, and everyone seemed to feel its influence.

Let us have a park! But do not take the old burying-ground as a cuspidor for loafers! RESIDENT.

FURNITURE. Paine's manufactory on Canal street, Boston, is furnishing a large number of houses in this vicinity with curtains, window shades, lambrequins, upholstered parlor and setting room furniture, chamber, dining room and library sets in ash, oak, mahogany, walnut, and imported fancy woods. New patterns are now being introduced. One great advantage in selecting from this place is the large assortment and low prices for the superior quality of the work, which is warranted to be in every respect as represented.

TOWN MEETINGS,

Special and Adjourned.

The Largest Appropriation Ever Made in Quincy; $120,000.00.

Soldiers' Bounties to be Paid, Vote, 484 to 58.

ROAD COMMISSION ABOLISHED AFTER CONSIDERABLE DISCUSSION.

The Voters of Quincy not yet ready for a Public Park.

A special meeting of the voters of Quincy was held at the Town Hall on Monday morning, at eight o'clock. Hon. John Quincy Adams was unanimously chosen moderator.

Edwin W. Marsh moved, that the moderator shall, without entertaining any other motion, declare this special meeting adjourned until 5 P. M., after article 2 of the warrant has been disposed of. Adopted.

The following article then came up for action:

ART. 2. To see how the town will vote on the following question: Will the town pay a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to each soldier or sailor who re-enlisted between the first day of December, 1863, and the twentieth day of April, 1864, in the quota of said town, and served until the close of the late war, or was honorably discharged during said period, and has never received any bounty from said town, and raise the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, and appropriate the same to the payment of said bounties.

Wm. G. A. Pattee moved to proceed to ballot by a Yes and No vote; that the check list be used, and that the polls remain open until 12.15 P. M. Adopted.

The polls were closed at the specified time, and the result of the balloting was an overwhelming majority in favor of paying the bounties asked; the vote was: Yes, 484; No, 58.

Of the number of votes in the negative, 31 were in accordance with the requirements of the statute, and 27 were cast with the word "sailor" omitted from the ballot.

The special meeting was then declared adjourned until 5 o'clock, at which time it was VOTED, That article three of the warrant relating to the construction of a public sewer, be referred to a committee of five citizens, to be appointed by the moderator, who shall carefully consider the whole subject, and report in writing so that their report may be printed before the next annual meeting, and considered under an appropriate article in the warrant for that meeting, and Messrs. Theophilus King, Jr., Herbert M. Federhen, Edwin W. Marsh, Josiah Quincy and William N. Eaton were elected said committee.

ART. 4. To see if the town will favor the building of a public sewer by a private corporation.

VOTED, That article four of the warrant relating to the building of a public sewer by a private corporation, be referred to the same committee.

ART. 5. To see if the town will accept the provisions of Sections 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68 of Chapter 27 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts, choosing Selectmen and Assessors for one, two and three years.

VOTED, That the Selectmen are hereby requested to cause to be inserted in the warrant for the next annual town meeting a copy of article five, of this warrant relating to the acceptance of the provisions of Section 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68, Chapter 27, of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts, choosing selectmen and assessors for one, two and three years.

VOTED, That this meeting be dissolved.

The adjourned annual meeting was called at one o'clock the same day; Hon. John Quincy Adams being the moderator. The attendance during the afternoon was such at times as to test the capacity of the hall to its fullest extent. Five ladies graced the assembly with their presence; they being Mrs. G. I. Aldrich, Mrs. James H. Slade, Mrs. H. A. Keith, Mrs. F. A. Claflin and Miss Emery.

The meeting opened quietly, and several of the articles were passed over quickly, without hardly a word being spoken except by the Moderator. But as the meeting grew in numbers, it waxed stronger in debate, and before the close many eloquent speeches were made. It is doubtful if many towns in the United States have more able and gifted gentlemen take part in their deliberations, than did Quincy on Monday last. We are happy to state, also, that during the long meeting of nearly seven hours, very few sharp, cross, or personal remarks were made; but all appeared in earnest and working for the good of the town. Article four was the first that came before the meeting, the first three articles having been disposed of at the first meeting.

ART. 4. To act upon the report of the Auditors of Accounts, Selectmen, School Committee, Road Commissioners, Trustees of Crane Public Library, Adams Academy, and Managers of Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

VOTED, That the course of the Engineers of the Fire Department and the Road Commissioners in exceeding their appropriations during the past year is disapproved. The attention of the officers composing those boards is called to article nine of the Town bylaws, and they are instructed hereafter to conform thereto.

Under article four the committee recommended that $500 dollars be appropriated for repairing the Town Hall.

Henry H. Faxon, wished for an explanation in regard to the appropriation of this sum. He said the Town Hall needs to be enlarged now, and must be done soon; and to lay out $500 on repairs at this time seemed to him to be throwing money away. He moved that that clause be stricken out and the voters agreed with him. The remaining votes under this article recommended by the committee was carried, as follows:

VOTED, That the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated to be expended under direction of the Selectmen in grading, fencing, &c., the grounds around the Almshouse.

VOTED, That the sum of $2500 be appropriated for the regular expenses of the Public Library and a further sum of $350 for the purposes of introducing water, grading and caring for grounds, the same to be expended by the Trustees.

VOTED, That so much of the Selectmen's report as relates to the town debt is referred to a committee consisting of the Town Treasurer and the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund; and the Treasurer is authorized, under the instructions of said committee, to issue new notes of the town to meet outstanding notes now due, said notes to be approved by the Selectmen.

ART. 5. To determine the method of repairing the highways during the ensuing year.

VOTED, That article five be laid upon the table to await the action of the town on article forty of the warrant.

ART. 6. To determine how the town land shall be improved during the ensuing year.

VOTED, That the Overseers of the Poor shall direct the improvement of the town lands for the ensuing year.

ART. 7. To see if the town will sell their land, or any part thereof, on Adams Street, known as the Newcomb lot, and authorize the Selectmen to execute a deed for the same.

VOTED, That the Selectmen are hereby authorized to sell land on Adams street, known as the "Newcomb lot," or any part thereof, and the proceeds, after deducting therefrom the necessary expenses of the sale, shall be paid over to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, who shall receipt therefor, and forthwith apply the same to the purposes of said fund.

ART. 8. To revise the Jury List.

VOTED, That the list of jurors as prepared by the Selectmen is hereby accepted, after striking out the names of H. M. Federhen and Samuel B. Turner at their request.

ART. 9. To hear and act upon the report of the Road Commissioners upon guide-boards.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners on guide-boards is hereby accepted.

ART. 10. To see if the town will appropriate the sum of two hundred dollars for repairing and decorating soldiers' graves, the same to be expended under the direction of Post 88 of the Grand Army of the Republic.

William G. A. Pattee, Esq., took exception to the vote recommended by the committee. He said that the town could not under this article legally vote to spend $200 in planting trees in memory of soldiers, and he would move that the usual vote be passed, which was carried.

VOTED, That the sum of $200 be appropriated for the purpose of keeping in repair or decorating the graves within the limits of Quincy, of soldiers and sailors who died in the military service of the United States, or the monuments or other memorials erected to their memory, the same to be expended under the direction of Post 88, of the Grand Army of the Republic; and the treasurer and commander of said Post, shall furnish to the Selectmen a true and detailed account, duly itemized and certified by them, of the manner in which said sum was expended, within thirty days after Decoration Day.

ART. 11. To see if the town will grant the free use of the Town Hall for free lectures, and appropriate money therefor.

Articles 11, 12 and 13 were quickly passed and the following votes recommended by the committee were adopted:

VOTED, That the Selectmen shall grant the free use of the Town Hall, whenever it is requested in writing by not less than two citizens of the town, for a free lecture on any scientific, literary or moral topic, subject to such regulations as they may deem expedient, and two hundred dollars is appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 12. To see if the town will instruct the Selectmen to appoint special police officers to enforce all laws bearing upon the sale of intoxicating liquors, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the Selectmen are instructed to appoint special officers to enforce all laws bearing on the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town, and $500 is appropriated for that purpose.

ART. 13. To see if the town will accept two water fountains from Henry H. Faxon, to be placed in the vicinity of the town pump and Wollaston depot, and appropriate money to erect same and furnish water supply.

VOTED, That the inhabitants of Quincy accept with gratitude the public-spirited proffer of their fellow-townsman, Henry H. Faxon, of two water fountains, and hereby return to him their cordial thanks for the gift, and they direct that they be erected at suitable spots, to be designated by the donor, and the sum of four hundred dollars is hereby appropriated to defray the necessary expense of setting them up and supplying them with water.

ART. 14. To see if the town will elect three Park Commissioners under the act of Legislature approved March 9, 1882.

Article fourteen relative to electing Park Commissioners opened a warm debate. William A. Hodges moved to lay the article on the table. James H. Slade moved that articles fourteen and fifteen be considered together. Mr. Hodges said that there was no need of choosing Park Commissioners unless they were to have a park, and he did not think the voters were ready for a park. Edwin W. Marsh wished to have a division of Mr. Hodges' motion. Wm. A. Hodges moved that the article be indefinitely postponed, and it was carried.

ART. 15. To see if the town will instruct the Park Commissioners to take a portion of the land left by the late Ebenezer Woodward to the town, and will appropriate money to pay for the same.

The meeting also voted decidedly to lay article fifteen on the table. Seth Dewing then enquired if it would be proper at any time during the meeting to reconsider the vote just passed; if so, he would move to reconsider now. James H. Slade hoped the meeting would not act on the subject at this time, as Mr. Charles F. Adams, Jr., who was very desirous of having a park had been unavoidably detained in Boston; and that Mr. Adams had something to say on the park question which he knew the voters would be pleased to hear; therefore he hoped the reconsideration of the question would be postponed until 3 o'clock. Henry H. Faxon favored waiting, so that Mr. Adams would have the opportunity of making his address on this subject; believing that those opposed to the park would not lose anything by waiting; and the voters decided to postpone the subject until three o'clock. At that hour, Mr. Adams being present, the discussion was renewed on the park question.

Charles F. Adams, Jr., then set the ball in motion in a lively manner, delivering a lengthy and frank speech favoring the establishing of a park on the tract of land left by the late Dr. Woodward to the town. He believed it would be a benefit to the town. It would attract men of wealth to Quincy to reside, and the increase in taxable property would more than pay for the expenses. He gave an illustration by referring to a western town in which he is interested, where a tract of land more valuable than this in Quincy was opened for a park, and it enhanced the value of all the property about it, and financially it paid handsomely. He spoke of the great advantages it would offer to the poor man. With the rapid increase in population, there would soon come a time, when no green spot would be left for the children to play on.

Henry H. Faxon wanted a Betterment Act. Those who owned property in the vicinity of the proposed park would be greatly benefitted and they should help pay for the betterment. He owned property in that vicinity and he knew it would immediately increase in value as soon as a park was started.

Charles A. Foster did not think a Betterment Act necessary, and was very strong in favor of parks. He spoke of the benefit Central Park, Fairmount Park and others had been to their respective cities.

James H. Slade made a very eloquent and able address in favor of parks. He knew it would be of great advantage to Quincy, from information he had received in other places, and facts that he had gathered.

Jonas Shackley argued against parks, thinking they benefitted the rich more than the poor.

William Everett then took the floor, it being the first time he had taken any part in town meetings since he became a citizen of this town,—some six years. He favored parks, and from the large number of cities he had visited where there were parks, he said he was able to speak from experience. He denounced in a spirited manner the bringing of the question of benefitting the rich and the poor into the discussion of such questions. He said the rich held no enmity against the working classes. His arguments were strong in favor of a park for Quincy.

Seth Dewing spoke against the park. He alluded to his remarks of last year concerning the unfit condition of the proposed land for the purpose intended, claiming it was mostly bog holes and swamp. He showed by the map issued with the book of the Merry Mount Park Association the boundary of the land, which he argued was also swampy and disagreeable. He also objected to the location. Mr. Dewing was frequently interrupted by the impatient voters who desired to have the question put to vote.

George F. Pinkham arose to favor the park, but it was almost impossible for him to obtain an audience, so impatient had the citizens become.

A vote was taken on the reconsideration, and the decision of the Moderator being doubted tellers were appointed, and it was found that 199 had voted in favor of the reconsideration and 239 against it.

ART. 16. To see what action, if any, the town will take in reference to laying out a park under the act approved March 9, 1882, and appropriate money therefor.

When the above article first came up for consideration it was voted to lay it upon the table, and it was taken therefrom after article fifteen had been finally settled upon.

Theophilus King, Jr., wanted the proposed land put to a practical test, and moved that the land be leased for two years at an expense not to exceed $350 annually.

Voted 109 to 167 against the motion.

ART. 17. To see if the town will, by its vote or otherwise, ask the Legislature to extend to women who are citizens the right to hold town offices and to vote in town affairs on the same terms as male citizens.

The committee recommended the indefinite postponement of the article.

W. L. Faxon moved as a substitute that the town petition the Legislature as desired.

VOTED, That articles 14, 15 and 16, relative to a public park, and article 17, relative to the right of women to hold town offices and vote in town affairs, be indefinitely postponed.

ART. 18. To see if the town will amend article 9 of the by-laws for the government of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery, by adding to the first clause thereof the words "or to persons entitled to burial privileges in the old burial ground," or such other amendments as may serve to extend the right to buy and hold lots in Mount Wollaston Cemetery to descendants of owners of tombs in the old cemetery.

VOTED, That article 9 of the by-laws for the government of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery is hereby amended, so that the first clause thereof shall read as follows, viz: "No lots shall be sold except to actual residents of the town, or to the proprietors of tombs in the old cemetery, who may purchase one lot for each tomb, and no more."

ART. 19. To see if the town will pay a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to certain soldiers who served during the late war as part of the quota of the town of Quincy, and have never received any bounty from the town, and appropriate a sum of money therefor.

A majority of the committee reported against the town appropriating any money for the above article, and a minority of the committee had favored the appropriation. But the town having voted 484 to 58 in the morning to pay the bounties, the following recommendations were made and adopted:

VOTED, That the sum of $2500 is hereby appropriated to payment of soldiers' bounties under the vote of the town passed at a special meeting held this day, and the Selectmen are instructed to secure the services of the Hon. George White, or if his services cannot be obtained those of some other suitable person, not a resident of the town, to act as a commissioner to receive, audit, and approve or reject any claims for bounties which may be made under the act of Legislature recently passed.

VOTED, That in each case where the commissioner aforesaid shall certify in writing that he is satisfied from the evidence submitted to him, and verified on oath, that the claimant, being a veteran or soldier then serving on an enlistment of not less than two years, re-enlisted in the quota of Quincy, between the dates specified in the act, and upon the promise of receiving a bounty of $125 from the town, which bounty for any reason was not paid, in such case the Selectmen may pay to the soldier so certified to, the whole, or any such portion of said sum of $125 which shall appear to be due him, taking therefore a discharge in full for all war services rendered which shall be placed on file among the vouchers of the town.

ART. 20. To see whether the town will authorize and direct the Selectmen to pay back to the representatives or heirs of James Huckins, late of Quincy, deceased, the double taxes that have been paid on land not belonging to his estate, the taxes thereon having been once taxed to and paid by the real owners of the land.

VOTED, That article 20, relative to paying back to the heirs of James Huckins money received for taxes, be indefinitely postponed.

ART. 21. To see if the town will appoint a committee, and authorize it, in connection with committees appointed by the other towns constituting the original town of Braintree, to have the records of Braintree, from 1640 to 1793, printed and indexed, and appropriate money therefor.

H. H. Faxon inquired the probable cost.

C. F. Adams, Jr., explained. He thought it would not cost the town a cent if they let the committee have the book now in the possession of the town to print from, and if it did he promised to pay the additional cost himself.

VOTED, That a committee of three persons, to be nominated by the Moderator, is hereby appointed, and they are directed to confer with any committees which may be appointed by the towns of Braintree, Randolph and Holbrook, in regard to printing and indexing the town records of Braintree from the year 1640 to the year 1793, and to contract therefor; and they are further authorized to use the copy of said records, now the property of this town, to print from, and Charles F. Adams, Jr., George L. Gill and E. W. Underwood were chosen said committee.

ART. 22. To see if the town will enlarge the Coddington Schoolhouse, or otherwise provide additional school accommodations, and appropriate money therefor.

The Committee recommended to appropriate $3,000 for the purpose.

J. G. Witham moved as an amendment that the sum be made $7,300.

C. F. Adams, Jr., explained how it could be done for $3,000, by moving the building now in the Adams Academy yard to the Coddington lot, and using that. He hauled the School Committee over the coals.

E. W. Marsh favored the recommendation, but at the same time defended the School Committee, upholding their doings.

J. G. Witham was not in favor of moving the "cheap old building" and favored his amendment, and in doing so he spoke for the School Committee. He thought it would be difficult to move the building. His remarks were illumined by several good illustrations.

Henry H. Faxon favored the moving if it could be done without cutting the building in two, and he thought it could. He did not like to see too many children crowded into one building.

Theophilus King, Jr., favored adopting the recommendation of the town meeting committee.

James H. Slade did not favor patching our school houses, and gave several illustrations of public buildings where it had been done to disadvantage, such as the State House, Boston. He gave the number of A Grammar scholars in various schools of the town, and endeavored to show the enormous cost to which the town went, to educate these few. He did not like to see scholars so scattered, and favored the moving of the building in question to a lot between the Coddington and Adams schoolhouses and then uniting the A and B Grammar pupils from each of these schools.

J. G. Witham again spoke in favor of his amendment, but on being put to a vote it was defeated.

E. W. Marsh moved as an amendment that the sum in the committee's recommendation be made $3500, in place of $3000.

C. F. Adams, Jr., offered a substitute appropriating $8000 towards purchasing a lot of land for a new schoolhouse, either in the centre or south part of the town.

Sigourney Butler spoke in favor of the School Committee, and the motion as drawn by C. F. Adams, Jr.

Mr. Marsh's amendment was defeated.

The committee's recommendation was adopted.

VOTED, That the School Committee are authorized to provide such additional school accommodations at the Coddington School as they may deem necessary at a cost not exceeding three thousand dollars, and the sum of three thousand dollars or so much thereof as may be required is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

H. H. Faxon wanted the town to get a bond of a lot of land, and wait until the town shall approve it before purchasing, and he made an amendment to that effect.

Mr. Butler accepted the amendment and G. F. Pinkham favored it.

VOTED, That the School Committee and the Selectmen shall be a committee to take a bond for a deed for a suitable piece of land for school purposes in the centre or south part of the town subject to the approval of the town at the next annual meeting, or in case such a parcel of land cannot be bonded, then they are authorized to buy it for a sum not exceeding eight thousand dollars; and the sum of four thousand dollars be appropriated to pay therefor, and the town treasurer is authorized to borrow any further sum necessary to complete such purchase money, and the School Committee shall include said sum borrowed in their estimate for the year 1885, and that the same be made a part of the levy for that year.

ART. 23. To see if the town will vote to change the present contract with the Quincy Water Company, in that which relates to the number of hydrants and the money to be paid for the same, so that the agreement shall be that the Quincy Water Company shall furnish, set, maintain and supply with water hydrants wherever desired by the town on its line of pipe, the town to pay for the same thirty-five (35) dollars each per annum.

H. M. Federhen moved as a substitute to the committee's recommendation that the article be indefinitely postponed.

Theo. King, Jr., hoped the article would not be postponed. He explained the locations of hydrants and said $35 per hydrant was cheap, and below the average in the state.

W. L. Faxon, for the Water Company, wished the clause "of such pattern and capacity as the Board of Engineers may designate" stricken out, saying the company would make no such contract.

Herbert M. Federhen spoke in favor of postponing, arguing that the contract as it now existed would be cheaper for the town.

Henry H. Faxon also desired to let the contract remain as it was.

An amendment was offered whereby the hydrants to be furnished should not exceed "two plug." The amendment was agreeable to W. L. Faxon and was accepted. The motion to indefinitely postpone being lost the recommendation of the committee as amended was adopted.

VOTED, That the committee appointed at the adjourned town meeting of July 10, 1883, to contract with the Quincy Water Company is hereby authorized and instructed to change the contract with that company so that it shall provide that the said Quincy Water Company shall furnish, set, maintain and supply with water, hydrants of such pattern and capacity as the Board of Engineers may designate, wherever desired by the town on its line of pipe, the town to pay thirty-five ($35) dollars per annum for each hydrant so furnished, provided the same shall be always supplied with an adequate pressure of water for efficient fire service.

ART. 24. To see if the town will sell the Tiger Engine.

VOTED, That the Engineers of the Fire Department are authorized to sell the Tiger Engine at public or private sale as they may deem most advisable and thereupon pay over to the Town Treasurer the net amount of the proceeds thereof.

ART. 25. To see if the town will cause the erection of additional fire alarm boxes, the same to be located under the directions of the Board of Engineers, and appropriate the sum of five hundred dollars therefor.

VOTED, That the Engineers are authorized to cause to be erected additional fire alarm boxes at points to be designated by them, and five hundred dollars or such part thereof as may be required is appropriated to pay therefor.

ART. 26. To see if the town will purchase fifteen hundred feet of hose, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the Engineers are authorized to purchase fifteen hundred feet of hose, for the use of the fire department and the sum of thirteen hundred dollars or such part thereof as may be required is appropriated to pay therefor.

ART. 27. To see if the town will cause a steam whistle to be placed at the pumping station of the Quincy water works.

VOTED, That the Engineers of the Fire Department are hereby authorized to purchase a steam whistle and "tapper" to be placed at the pumping station of the Quincy Water Company and connected with the fire alarm telegraph, provided suitable arrangements can be made with the Water Company for connecting the same, sounding the alarms and any other conditions they may think necessary, and also provided that the whole, when completed and in working order, shall not exceed in cost $250, and that sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

ART. 28. To see if the town will authorize the Board of Engineers to reorganize the fire department by selling any portion of the present apparatus and purchasing new, if, in their opinion, they find that the proposed hydrant service will warrant them in so doing, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the Board of Engineers and the Board of Selectmen, acting as a joint commission, are hereby empowered to re-organize the fire department in such manner and at such times, having due regard to the hydrant water service and all other attendant circumstances, as the safety and best interests of the town may, in their judgment, demand, and in pursuance of such plan to sell, exchange or replace any part of the present apparatus.

ART. 29. To see if the town will place a fire alarm box on some building at a point near the present location of the steam fire pump.

VOTED, That the matter of article twenty-nine is hereby referred to the Board of Engineers.

ART. 30. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Quincy Avenue to South Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Quincy avenue to South street is hereby accepted, and the sum of three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 31. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way, being an extension of Quarry Street, westerly to Common Street, and appropriate money therefor.

The committee recommended the laying out of such a town way.

W. G. A. Pattee moved that it be indefinitely postponed. He claimed that such a road was not needed or desired by the abuttors; that the land damages would be large, and the road would be difficult to build, and dangerous to passers-by after it was built. He presented a petition from several of the land holders in the immediate vicinity, protesting against it.

George F. Pinkham, as one of the committee, spoke in favor of the recommendation.

Three gentlemen from the west part of the town (who were unknown to our reporter) favored the road, saying it was needed. They now had occasion to go over the proposed road, and knew it would be much more convenient if there was a good road, and besides it would save the roads through the centre of the town, because many stone teams would then go by the way of West Quincy and Granite bridge to Boston.

H. H. Faxon opposed the road.

J. Q. A. Field favored the building of the road, but wished the town to take three years to do it, and if the motion to indefinitely postpone was lost he would make such a motion.

W. L. Faxon favored the proposed road.

Voted 163 to 62 not to indefinitely postpone the article.

J. Q. A. Field then offered the following vote as a substitute to the committee's recommendation which was accepted:

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way in extension of Quarry street westerly to Common street, is hereby accepted and that three years be allowed for building the same and that three thousand dollars be now appropriated therefor.

ART. 32. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Lincoln Avenue to Newport Avenue, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Lincoln avenue to Newport avenue is hereby accepted, and the sum of fourteen hundred and twenty-five dollars is hereby appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 33. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out as a town way Walker Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners laying out Walker street as a town way is hereby accepted, and the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars is appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 34. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners widening Copeland Street near the corner of Willard Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners widening Copeland street near the corner of Willard street is hereby accepted and the sum of one hundred dollars is appropriated to defray the cost thereof.

ART. 35. To see if the town will accept the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Old Colony Street to Depot Street, being an extension of Contest Avenue.

VOTED, That the report of the Road Commissioners laying out a town way from Old Colony street to Depot street is hereby accepted.

ART. 36. To see if the town will change the name of Contest Avenue to Newbury Avenue.

The committee recommended the change.

Sigourney Butler did not favor continually changing the names of our streets and moved that the article be indefinitely postponed.

George F. Pinkham favored the change, saying the present name had been sprung upon the town a few years ago, and was not desired by the residents of that section of the town.

William B. Glover said the voters of Atlantic were all united now that the name should be changed to Newbury avenue. The town thought differently and voted 131 to 78 against the change.

VOTED, That the name of that way in Quincy heretofore known as Contest avenue remains the same and not be changed to Newbury avenue.

ART. 37. To see if the town will repair Douglas Street, and appropriate one hundred dollars therefor.

VOTED, That the sum of one hundred dollars is hereby appropriated to be expended upon the necessary repairs of Douglas street.

ART. 38. To see if the town will rebuild the wall in front of Charles Loring's place, on Washington Street, and appropriate money therefor.

VOTED, That article 38, relative to rebuilding the wall in front of Charles Loring's place, on Washington street, and article 41, relative to a fire alarm at Squantum, be indefinitely postponed.

ART. 39. To see if the town will discontinue that portion of Valley Street leading from Coddington Street to its junction with Valley Street, as relocated March, 1882, and transfer the same to the Managers of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

VOTED, That the portion of Valley street leading from Coddington street to its junction with Valley street as it runs as relocated March, 1882, is hereby discontinued, and the released location is transferred to the Mount Wollaston Cemetery and made a part of that burial ground.

ART. 40. To see if the town will revoke the vote whereby it accepted the provisions of CHAP. 158 of the Acts of the year 1871, and abolish the Road Commissioners.

A majority of the committee recommended that the board of Road Commissioners be abolished, and the minority favored the indefinite postponement of the article.

A motion was made to indefinitely postpone, and a lively discussion followed.

Wm. G. A. Pattee opposed the motion, saying that the roads had not been taken care of as well, or as cheaply, as in past years.

John Q. A. Field favored Road Commissioners. He thought the roads could be much better taken care of under a continuous board. He knew from experience where the work of Surveyors of the Highways one year had been changed the next year, under a different board. And thus from year to year the work of the preceding board had been changed at a great cost to the town and with but little profitable results.

H. H. Faxon opposed Road Commissioners because it made another board of officers. Mr. Faxon said he did not favor having officials who were not paid, and who consequently did not feel responsible. He knew that this Road Commission was Field's "infant," and that he (Field) had consented this year to be its "wet nurse" to save its life, but he did not think that would sustain it.

William H. Glennon also opposed the motion. He wanted the town to hire a civil engineer and let him make specifications, and then let the job out by contract, under the direction of the Selectmen.

James H. Slade favored Road Commissioners, in a lengthy speech. He reviewed the report of the minority of the committee, and advanced the arguments there presented, as published in last Saturday's PATRIOT.

George Cahill opposed the Commission, and thought the gentlemen elected as Selectmen were the proper ones to look after the highways.

Charles A. Foster favored and Henry H. Faxon again opposed. The question being called it was voted 187 to 120 not to postpone.

The recommendation of the majority of the committee was then adopted.

VOTED, That the acceptance by the Inhabitants of Quincy of the provisions of chapter one hundred and fifty-eight of the Statutes of the year eighteen hundred and seventy-one is hereby revoked and the vote of the Town accepting the same is hereby rescinded and the Board of Road Commissioners is abolished, and under article 2 of the warrant, Messrs. Geo. H. Field, Elias A. Perkins and Christopher A. Spear were chosen Surveyors of Highways, and under article 5 of the warrant it was voted that the repairs of the highways be made under the direction of the Surveyors of Highways.

ART. 42. To see what compensation the town will allow the engineers, members and stewards of the fire department for their services during the past year.

Discussion arose over the pay for the members of the Hook and Ladder Company. The committee recommended that they be paid $10 each, same as in preceding years.

William G. A. Pattee moved that they be paid $20 each, claiming that they were obliged to respond to all alarms while other companies were not.

Edwin W. Marsh explained the position of the committee, saying that they had always had to respond to all alarms and that now they did not have to start for every blaze seen at a distance, and, furthermore, they now have their truck drawn by horses.

Charles F. Adams, Jr., warned the town against larger appropriations.

It was voted not to pay $20, and the following vote was passed:

VOTED, That the members, stewards and engineers of the Fire Department shall be paid as follows, viz:

| | |
|---|---|
| Steamer, 12 members, at $20 each, | $240 |

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

SCROFULA

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Lights and Shades.

The gloomiest day hath gleams of light,
The darkest wave hath bright foam near it;
And twinkles through the cloudiest night
Some solitary star to cheer it.

The gloomiest soul is not all gloom;
The saddest heart is not all sadness;
And sweetly o'er the darkest doom
There shines some lingering beam of gladness.

Ees pair is never quite despair.
Nor life nor death the future closes;
And round the shadowy brow of care
Will hope and fancy twine their roses.

Farm and Garden.

Utilizing Bones.

Among the waste materials on the farm there are few, if any, that are richer in one of the most important elements of plant food than bones, when made soluble in water. Just how to do this in the cheapest, and at the same time the best manner, is a question that is frequently asked by the farmer, and is so often answered by those who have no practical knowledge of the matter that the farmer is frequently misled, and spends so much time to no purpose, that he becomes discouraged and sells the waste bones of the farm at a very low price, or neglects altogether to pick them up.

Some advise composting with hot stable manure, claiming that the heat will soften the bones so they will crumble and become soluble; others claim if composted with ashes the hardest bones will soften. The fact is, manure will decompose only the soft bones, and ashes will not soften any bones except the ashes be wet. The potash in the ashes, when extended with water, will in time penetrate and soften the hardest bones. It should ever be kept in mind that it is not the ashes that softens the bone, but the material that comes from the ashes; therefore when ashes are resorted to for this purpose, particular effort should be made to extract the potash from the ashes, and save it in a manner to be brought in direct contact with the bone.

To be reasonably sure of success, the work should be done under cover, so that just the right quantity of water can be applied to make the lye strong enough to remove the grease and gluten from the bones. Some water-tight tank should be used, and the bones should be packed at the bottom, so they will be covered by the lye; but in packing the bones all of the open spaces should be filled with ashes, so that there shall be no waste room to be filled by the lye; because if there be too much waste room the lye will not reach the upper portion of the bones without diluting it with water so much that it will not be strong enough to accomplish the object desired. After the bones are thus packed they should be covered with ashes as deep as are the bones; then water should be applied very gradually in a manner as when ashes are set to leach. It requires quite as much judgment to make lye to dissolve bone as it does to make it for soap.

It will require several months, and sometimes a whole year, to soften the bones in this way, the time depending on the strength of the lye and the hardness of the bones. If taken out too soon the hard bones can be thrown out to be put in the next lot. Some recommend sulphuric acid, but to soften large bones with this material is not practicable, and those who recommend it are mere theorists.

The simplest and cheapest way to reduce bones to make them available for plant food is to burn them; but to do this is a great loss of valuable plant food, as it consumes all of the nitrogen; yet the ashes is very rich in phosphate, being about eighty per cent. It also contains sixteen per cent. of carbonate of lime, two or three per cent. of phosphate of magnesia, soda and potash. All of these substances are indispensable to vegetable growth. The process of burning bones is so simple that some contend that when only small quantities are reduced it is the best way, even though the nitrogen be lost. It would certainly be better to burn them than to sell them for half a cent, or even a cent a pound.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Anecdotes.

"I had a hundred dollars and ten cents in my pocketbook after I left my lawyer's office," said a witness in a pocket-picking case.

"What? left a lawyer's office with a hundred dollars in your pocket!" exclaimed the counsel for the defence in a tone of amazement. "Well, it may have occurred. I don't think that the Bar as a whole is as talented as it used to be."

"John," said a teacher, "I'm very sorry to have to punish you."

"Then don't. I'll let you off this time," responded John.

"Yes," said the doctor, "you must prepare yourself for the worst. You cannot live many days. You had better make your will at once"

"Make my will?" gasped the sick lawyer.

"Yes," replied the doctor, gently, "It would be well, I think."

"No," the legal man said, shaking his head. "I will never make a will. My family needs what little property I have got."

Teacher—"What part of speech is the word 'egg'?"

Boy—"Noun, sir."

"What is its gender?"

"Can't say, sir, till it's hatched."

"Well, then, my lad, can't you tell me the case?"

"Oh, yes, sir; the shell."

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Aug. 12, 1882.

MESSRS. LEWIS & CO.:

Gentlemen:—You ask me what effect Lewis' "Red Jacket Bitters" has had in my case. In answer, will say that for the past eighteen months I have been chock full of malaria, as you well know. I have employed different physicians without avail, and was taking from fifteen to eighteen grains of quinine daily when I began the use of "Red Jacket Bitters." I have now used four bottles of the bitters, and am for the first time in eighteen months strong and well. They are worth their weight in gold. Yours truly,

Temperance.

Furnished for publication by the W. C. T. Union.

From Graham's Lectures.

Tobacco is not only one of the most powerful but one of the most loathsome poisons in the vegetable kingdom,—and therefore, when any human being has succeeded in overcoming the strongest instinctive antipathies of his nature, and formed an appetite for this filthy weed, that appetite is extremely despotic in its power, and will not be appeased by any other stimulant, and is more difficult to overcome than almost any other depravity of the human body. Opium is in all respects so essentially like tobacco that what is true of one, in regard to its effects on the human system, is in general true of the other, except that opium, being more commonly taken into the stomach, more immediately impairs the digestive organs, and diffuses its mischievous influence more rapidly and extensively throughout the whole system, causing a correspondent degree of physiological prostration, and morbid irritability, and consequently increasing the frequency and energy of the demand for stimulation, and leading to greater excess in quantity, and proportionately more ruinous effects on the animal, intellectual and moral nature of man; rendering him extensively diseased, and—except when under the direct stimulation of his drug—stupid, sottish and extremely miserable. Alcohol, being a more rapidly diffusable and a more fiery stimulant, seems almost instantaneously to pervade the whole system, and to make a direct assault on every part of the living body at once. A very few drops of pure alcohol introduced into the human stomach unaccustomed to it, will destroy life nearly as quick as prussic acid; and a small quantity of the common spirits of wine of the shops, will destroy life in a few minutes; yet by commencing the use of it in a very diluted form and in small quantities, and gradually increasing the strength and quantity the human body, we know from most melancholy fact, may, through physiological depravity, be so accustomed to this deadly poison, that it will receive it in large quantities, and in some rare instances be, as it were, saturated with it for many years, and will still live on. Yet alcohol, whether in the form of distilled liquors or fermented, whether in wine or beer or cider, is always an anti-vital principle, always acts on the human body to disturb and impair its physiological functions, and to destroy its physiological powers.

Household Receipts.

PORK CAKE. One pound of pork chopped fine; one half cup of boiling water poured over three cups of sugar, two of milk, two pounds of raisins or currants.

COMPOSITION CAKE. Two and one-fourth pounds flour, one and three-fourth pounds sugar, one and one-half pounds butter, three pounds fruit, six eggs, one pint milk, one cup molasses, two glasses wine, two glasses brandy, two teaspoons saleratus. Cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg, etc.

To cure rheumatic pains bathe the parts affected with water in which potatoes have been boiled, as hot as can be borne, just before going to bed.

A pain in the back between the shoulders, or at the waist, may be greatly soothed if rubbed for half hour with any liniment, or with a piece of red flannel.

Delicate children who cannot go out during the winter should be given a sunbath every bright day. Let them play in a sunny room, and when the sun comes in the strongest let them sit for an hour or so where it can shine upon them. Sunshine is a necessary element in a child's life, both physically and figuratively.

This and That.

☞ "A wise cook says, "Never boil vegetables with soup stock, for if you do, it will certainly become sour in a short time."

☞ A little girl who was taken to a mum party made a busted community of it by asking her mother, "where are the mummies?"

☞ The English alphabet is tolerably virtuous. Twenty of the letters have never been in prison.—New York News. Yes, but look what a lot of them are now in penitentiary.

☞ Modern song of the shirt: "Rip, rip, rip, band and gusset and seam. Rip, rip, rip; confound the sewing machine.

☞ There are two ways of getting through this world. One way is to make the best of it, and the other is to make the worst of it. Those who take the latter course work hard for poor pay.

☞ "O!" said the man who had traveled. "I didn't mind having the delirium tremens. I saw snakes and alligators and things, but it merely seemed as though I was in Florida."

☞ A small boy who stood gazing wistfully at a large candy man in a confectioner's window, suddenly exclaimed: "I could lick that fellow with both hands tied behind my back!"

☞ A Chicago woman was made crazy by a sudden and unexpected kiss. Every sensible Quincy girl is expected to read this to her lover and say, "Law, sakes, I'll bet it wouldn't affect me that way!"
